

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

REPORT.

Hon. S. F. NIXON, Speaker of the Assembly, Albany, N. Y.:

SIR—I herewith submit the annual report of the State Historian. While the business of the office has steadily and healthily increased in many respects, the office force remains substantially as it was during the second year of its existence. Not only has the correspondence increased to an inordinate extent, but the queries that have been submitted and answered, from all parts of the country, have in themselves formed no inconsiderable part of the work of the department. The nature of the questions submitted for decision, ranging from those of a purely genealogical nature to those of an important historical character, indicates not only the growing interest of the people all over the country in historical studies and historical pursuits, but has resulted practically in the maintenance of a bureau of information for the dissemination of historical knowledge of all kinds and character.

In other respects the department has expanded. The mere work of transcribing official records is in itself comparatively an easy task, but the real labor is involved in preparing and editing the work for the printer, in reading proofs, guarding against inaccuracies of any description, in transcription, in composition and in typographical corrections, and in distributing the volumes after they are printed and bound. During the year 1900 this office printed and distributed three volumes of the Public Papers of George Clinton, and delivered to the state printer two volumes of the Ecclesiastical History of the State of New York, under authority of the provision made in the supply bill of 1899 and 1900. The number of volumes distributed by this office during that period aggregates 10,490.

In addition to the varied nature of this work, the correspondence of the office was scrupulously maintained, and every query that was submitted was answered without unnecessary delay. The report on the work of the Dutch Records Department was transmitted to the Senate January 9th. The present report embraces the military appointments of the Council of Appointment, covering the period from the signing of the treaty of Paris in 1783 to 1821, when, under the action of the Constitutional Convention of that year, the Council of Appointment ceased to exist. Properly to elucidate this matter, it was deemed essential to prepare chapters on the constitutional history of New York during the colonial period, and on the conditions that existed at the time of the adoption of the first constitution of this State. What originally had been intended as a brief outline has expanded into a lengthy treatise, covering the period from the earliest Dutch times to the separation of the province from the mother country.

I remain,

Very respectfully,

HUGH HASTINGS,

STATE HISTORIAN.

CHAPTER I.

THE GOVERNMENT OF NEW YORK DURING COLONIAL TIMES.

FOR many years after the settlement of the colonies the inhabitants bestowed but little thought and attention upon the proposition of self-government. The duties of citizenship concerned them but remotely. Fictitious ideas prevailed and exaggerated rumors were circulated over Europe concerning the wealth and the possibilities of America, which, united with the air of mystery and of romance that enveloped the new country, attracted the curiosity and aroused the cupidity of the most wayward and most reckless classes of the old world. These early colonists displayed conspicuous courage in crossing the great trackless waste in their tiny shallops and in facing and braving the unknown dangers they encountered during the voyage and the multitudinous privations after their arrival. As developers of the new country, however, they were pronounced failures, for as a rule they were shiftless, indolent, dependent and irresponsible. What a discouraging outlook is given on the arrival of Director General Kieft in New York in 1638! The official records report that many of the farms were devoid of tenants and of cultivation or had been thrown into common, that trading vessels with one exception were in bad condition, that the houses were out of repair, that only one sawmill out of three was in operation, that the fort in New Amsterdam lay in a state of dilapidation and decay, and that the site of the magazine was scarce discoverable. In 1656 Van der Donck paints a different picture. He states that people of property had now settled in New York, that good buildings had been erected, fine farms cultivated and excellent pasturage and orchards maintained, whereas before this period the emigrants were adventurers, who had brought in little, carried away much and thought nothing of the common good. Before the West India Company began to exercise the arbitrary prerogatives granted by its articles of incorporation, the settlements of New Netherland consisted merely of a few trading posts, with surrounding forts that had been erected for their protection. Military as well as civil authority was vested in the commandant of these forts.

As a creature of the States-general, the West India Company, the declared rival of the French for the Canadian fur trade, managed affairs in the colony with an iron hand. Scant consideration was given the settler. The policy of the company was purely commercial, and in the furtherance of that policy the powers of government, executive, legislative and judicial, were delegated to a director-general or a governor and his council; the latter consisting of an indefinite number of persons, generally not exceeding six, who were appointed by the governor. The official acts of the governor were subject to the approval of the company, and the company was subordinate to the States-general, who exercised general supervision and in whom was vested the ultimate sovereignty. The colonial government and colonial laws closely followed those of the fatherland, but an indulgence was conceded to a citizen across the sea that was withheld from the settler in the colony.

Severe as were the restrictions, political and religious, under the Dutch, the colonists enjoyed life far more advantageously under the rule of the English. Ostensibly they exercised all the freedom of Englishmen, under the declaration of Governor Fletcher "there are none of you but are big with the privileges of Englishmen and Magna Charta," but, in reality, they had no voice in governing themselves—the King and his Council dictating, often framing and systematically executing all laws.

Liberty of action was restrained as arbitrarily as liberty of speech was suppressed. To successive governors the Crown issued the same sort of repressive instructions. "Allow no person to use a printing press on any occasion whatever" was one of the orders received by Governor Dongan, of New York, and by Lord Effingham, one of Virginia's early governors; while the sentiments of those in authority during the time of Cromwell are reflected in the expressions of Sir William Berkeley, Governor of Virginia, who declared for King Charles II and who gave thanks to God that there were no free schools nor printing; "for learning has brought heresy and disobedience and sects into the world, and printing has divulged them and libels against the best government. God keep us from both!" The damage to history by this barbaric policy is irreparable and incalculable. The political and legislative history of the province of New York under the proprietary government of James, Duke of York, is buried under the prejudices and bigotry of the age; for the acts of the governors and the transactions of the councils were intrusted to the uncertain care of manuscripts which, by constant handling and frequent mutilation, have become defective, imperfect and consequently worthless. Viewed from the standard of ethics, morals and liberty of the twentieth century, the meek submission and the refulgent humility of the colonists of the seventeenth century are as inexplicable as their willingness to contribute cheerfully and generously to the support of the home government was admirable. The steadily developing prosperity of the colonies became a source of unfeigned jealousy to England, whose exchequer was often stripped and laid bare through the extravagances of the reigning monarchs. With the growth and expansion of the colonies, however, and with a keen appreciation of their political dependency and helplessness, there was born the perfectly natural ambition to participate in the responsibilities of government to secure a voice in the disbursement of moneys to which the colonists in part contributed, particularly in the imposition and in the collection of taxes. In the first charter of freedoms and exemptions the colonists were allowed the hollow concession of appointing a deputy, who was permitted under certain conditions to give information to the director-general and Council. The duties of the deputy fell far short of the dignity of advisory. His knowledge of the colony and of the Indians was technical and thorough, and was utilized to supply the deficiencies of the governor and Council whenever a crisis occurred; but when he presumed to suggest reforms or propose remedies for existing evils and abuses, he was promptly removed from office, for leading to "dangerous consequences."

Charles II in one of his impulsive humors had granted representative government to Connecticut and Massachusetts. It was not, however, until the arrival of Colonel Thomas Dongan that New York obtained a semblance of representative government. Of the early governors of New York, Dongan seems to be the broadest gauge and the most enlightened and progressive. He was an avowed Papist, and was sent by his royal master, James, Duke of York, who had received from Charles II the grant of territory comprising New Jersey and New York, to introduce papacy in a country where more hostility existed against it than sympathy for it. Like a good soldier, in the enemy's country, Dongan moved cautiously and conservatively. He had arrived in New York in August, 1683, eleven months after his appointment, and had been received by the colonists with marked tokens of honor. James had ordered him to call an assembly of representatives, and accordingly on October 17, 1683, the representatives of the people of New York met, for the first time, in assembly in New York City. The sessions continued until November 3d. This assembly enacted laws in effect that the supreme authority under the king and duke "shall forever reside in a governor, council and the people met in general assembly;" the exercise of the chief magistracy shall be vested in a governor, assisted by a council, who is to govern according to law; the oldest of the council shall act in the absence of the governor; assemblies shall be held triennially; the legislative power shall rest with the governor and council and twenty-one representatives and as many more as his Royal Highness shall deem necessary; the representatives shall appoint their times of meeting and to adjourn from time to time at their will—to be sole judges of the qualifications of their own members—to be free from arrest while "sitting and going and coming;" no tax shall be imposed but by consent of the three powers, governor, council and representatives; bail allowed except for treason and felony; no freeman compelled to receive soldiers into his house but in time of war; no court shall have power to issue execution against any man's land, to be sold or otherwise disposed of without the owner's consent; all persons professing faith in God by Jesus Christ, to have free and full liberty, unmolested to exercise the mode of worship agreeable to them, provided they do not disturb the good people; and that all the Christian churches in the province shall enjoy the same privileges as heretofore.

The province was divided into shires and counties—New York, Westchester, Ulster, Albany, Dutchess, Orange, Richmond, Kings, Queens, Suffolk; and Dukes and Cornwall counties, which lay beyond the boundaries of the province. Equally important was the act determining the jurisdiction of the courts of justice—town and county, courts of Oyer and Terminer; and a court of Chancery to be regarded as the Supreme Court. During the sessions of 1685 and 1686 charters were granted to the cities of New York and Albany respectively. The hope of the colonists for better things was short-lived, however. The Assembly promised by the Charter of Liberties and Privileges never convened; for in February, 1685, Charles II died, his brother James ascended the throne, and as James the King repudiated many acts of James the Duke; the charter was promptly vetoed and the Assembly was abolished. The governor returned to the monopoly of executive, legislative and judicial autocracy.

At this juncture Louis XIV of France was recognized as the most powerful sovereign in Europe. James on his accession to the throne had promised "to preserve the government both in church and state as it is now by law established"—a statement that completely disarmed his people of any suspicion that might have been entertained regarding his Catholic proclivities. The declaration had scarcely been known ere he attempted to make a religious coalition with the House of Bourbon. His campaign was well under way before his people discovered his duplicity. In England, Scotland and Ireland Protestant officials were summarily ejected from office and were succeeded by Catholics; officers of high rank in the army were removed for no other reason than that they refused to bow to the Church of Rome. The King's headstrong, obstinate course soon involved him into a network of difficulties that threatened disaster. In America Dongan fell under the royal displeasure by his failure to establish the church on a durable footing. Whether the clear-headed Irishman yielded to local sentiment and influence, or whether he foresaw where the King's tyrannical course would bring him, he procrastinated under the argument that the hostility of the Five Nations to the Jesuits of Canada was the best safeguard for New York.

New York had not escaped the wave of religious intolerance that had been rolling over Europe during the past half century. As early as 1640, the Dutch records carry an ordinance prohibiting the exercise of all other religions except the "Reformed as it is at present preached and practiced by public authority" in the United Netherlands. The following year, however, the phlegmatic Dutch revoked this arbitrary mandate and "allowed the good number of respectable English people" "the free exercise of their religion." The spirit of the times hardly justified freedom of worship. The power of the state was systematically and often unprincipally exerted in promoting and maintaining the religious denomination of that state. The persecution of the English by the Dutch in 1640 was no more sinister or reprehensible than the persecution of the Jews by the Catholic rulers and the persecution of the Catholics and the Jews subsequently by the Church of England. As far back as 1644, the great and good Father Jogues, the first Catholic missionary to New York, found that the colony harbored Catholics, English Puritans, Quakers, Lutherans, Anabaptists called Mnistes [Mennists or Mennonites as they are known to-day], and Dutch Reformers, and that an order was in force denying "public worship" to all but Calvinists. And yet in 1700 the statute book was defaced by a law which ordered that every popish priest who came into the province voluntarily should be hanged, recalling the forty-four years of Queen Elizabeth's reign, during which thirty priests and five sympathizers were executed.

Peter Stuyvesant had exacted from his conquerors the stipulation that liberty of conscience and church government should prevail then and forever—a stipulation that Governor Dongan was not disposed to repudiate. His royal master, with overweening confidence in his ecclesiastical supremacy, disregarded every obligation that a just and honest monarch would recognize and honor, and was finally undone by the rallying cry for William and Mary, "a free Parliament and the Protestant religion!" With the fall of James the common contest against Catholicism ended, but hardly had William and Mary assumed the reins of government ere the questions of religious toleration and freedom of worship began to be agitated anew. To attain this end, royal patronage was prostituted in a manner and for purposes that, even in these days of alleged corrupt politics, would excite a prodigious cry of condemnation. The colonial governors in the main were blundering, worn-out, and incompetent soldiers, or poor and worthless scions of nobility, whose contempt for the colonists was only equaled by their ignorance of the country they were sent to govern. As a rule they allied themselves with the so-called aristocratic party of the colony—the time-servers of the Crown.

No better illustration of the subserviency of that class to royal influence can be found than in the address which the House of Representatives made April 18, 1691, to Governor Henry Sloughter, the notorious and contemptible creature who was responsible for the disgraceful episode, known as the Leisler-Milborne murder. "In all most humble manner" the representatives "heartily congratulate your Excellency's arrival in this government" that as in their "hearts we do abhor and detest all the rebellious, arbitrary and illegal proceedings of the late usurpers;" "so we do from the bottom of our hearts with all integrity acknowledge and declare, that there are none that can, or ought, to have right to rule and govern their majesties' subjects here;" "and therefore we do solemnly declare, that we will with our lives and fortunes, support and maintain the administration of your Excellency's government." One of the laws passed this year, ordained that no person or persons "which profess faith in God, by Jesus Christ, his only son, shall at any time be any wayes, molested, punished, disturbed or disquieted, or called in question for any difference in opinion or matter of conscience in Religious Concernment who doe not under that pretence disturb the civil peace of the province;" that all persons were entitled to meet freely at convenient places to worship according to their respective persuasions "always provided that nothing herein mentioned or contained shall extend to give Liberty for any persons of the Romish Religion to exercise their manor of worshipping contrary to the Laws and Statutes of their majesties Kingdom of England." Under the guise that "prophaneness and Liscentiousness hath of late overspread this province," it was ordered that "good sufficient" Protestant ministers should officiate in the city of New York and the counties of Richmond, Westchester and Queens, and that the cost of maintenance should fall upon the province.

Captain Richard Ingoldesby, who became involved in the Leisler affair, Benjamin Fletcher, who succeeded Sloughter, and Lord Cornbury were no improvement over the early type of governor, for they represented an aggregation of executive incompetency blended with irrepressible rapacity unequalled in the history of colonial America. Fletcher and Cornbury surpassed all their predecessors in their determination to strengthen the Church of England in the province, the former openly advocating the establishment of a diocese in charge of the bishop of London. Discovered in a scheme to enrich himself by fraudulent practices, and accused of being a partner of pirates on the coast, charges were preferred against him, and were sustained. As an official Fletcher stretched the patience of even the debauched home government and he was recalled.

“The true nursing father of the church,” Edward Hyde, Viscount Cornbury, was preceded to this country by his reputation—that of a spendthrift and bankrupt. He had squandered his patrimony, been dunned by his creditors, and hounded by money-lenders until his cousin, the Queen, Anne—whose father, James II, married the sister of Cornbury’s father—sent him to America to retrieve his shattered income. The grandson of the notorious Edward Hyde, the first Earl of Clarendon, chief legal adviser to Charles I, and Lord Chancellor of England under Charles II, impeached as such and driven in disgrace from England, Cornbury inherited many vices and by environment acquired more. He met with as much resistance as his predecessors in his plans to promote the church, but surpassed them all in high-handedness. His arbitrary seizure of a Presbyterian parsonage at Jamaica, Long Island, and his complacency in presenting it to the Episcopal church, started the clashes between the Assembly and the Governor that grew fiercer as time went on and as the financial exactions shifted from the oppressive to the tyrannical. Nor was he content to stop here. Personal liberty was trampled under foot repeatedly by this degenerate son of the nobility. Two Presbyterian ministers from Virginia had preached in New York without a license. They were thrown into prison by order of the Governor. At their trial the judge instructed the jury to return a special verdict until the law on the subject could be determined; but the jury, keenly sensitive of the blow that was struck at the liberty of their countrymen, promptly acquitted the prisoners. Not satisfied with contracting heavy debts to every tradesman who would trust him, Cornbury degraded the dignity of his high position by using its vast resources repeatedly to defy his creditors. The Assembly had acted most liberally toward him. He was allowed £1,800 for the defence of the frontier and a gift of £2,000 to defray the expenses of his voyage, but his unchecked extravagance finally forced him to embezzle large sums of money that had been appropriated for public works and for the protection of the frontier. With these facts publicly known, he threw the Assembly into a state of panic by spurious intelligence of a contemplated French invasion, and under this ruse succeeded in filching £1,500 more of the public money that had been confided to his charge.

When the Assembly remonstrated against his practices, threatened to establish a board to regulate and control public expenditures, and insisted upon scrutinizing his accounts, they were met by their governor in an angry speech and warned not to provoke him to exercise "certain powers" which the Queen had vested in him. He advised them to let him hear less about the rights of the house, as the house had no rights beyond those permitted through the grace and good pleasure of her Majesty. The majority of the Assembly—constituting the aristocratic party—which had served him with unswerving loyalty, he now found opposed to him; and though he repeatedly dissolved mutinous assemblies, one after another, it was to find in the end that each succeeding body was more obstinate than its predecessor. Eventually the Assembly refused point blank to vote an appropriation for the support of government, until the Governor rendered an accounting of his stewardship—the colonists unselfishly denying themselves the necessary concomitants of government rather than countenance and encourage a corrupt and profligate administration.

In the successive administrations of mismanagement, misgovernment and corruption, where turbulence and warfare were the rule between the governors and the House of Assembly, where the rights of the colonies were disregarded and the privileges of the colonists ignored, there are three bright particular stars, whose lustre strengthens with years, the administrations of the Irish Lord, Richard Coote, Earl of Bellomont, Robert Hunter and William Burnet. No governor ever assumed office with so thorough a knowledge of his predecessor's shortcomings or was expected to accomplish more reforms than Bellomont. The Assembly welcomed him warmly, "being well assured from the zeal which hath been so eminently conspicuous in your lordship in Europe for the best religion and best constitution of laws." They hoped to lay the foundation of a "lasting happiness to this province by uniting the minds of the people, supporting the dignity of the government and establishing such a constitution of laws as may forever exclude popery and slavery."

Bellomont found "the whole government out of frame." He deplored the legacy which his predecessor left him. "The fortifications, even the governor's house," were "much out of repair." He laments "the difficulties" which he had "to struggle with;" "a divided people, an empty treasury, a few miserable, naked, half-starved soldiers, not half the King allowed, pay." Where Fletcher tried to destroy, Bellomont attempted to construct. The former retarded the development of the province, the latter by his enlightened and progressive policy materially improved it. Enjoying the unlimited confidence of his sovereign, Bellomont, during his short term as governor, exercised a most wholesome and salutary influence over the colonists. A library was established, shipping promoted, printing encouraged, and education, which had been neglected, stimulated. Unfortunately, however, Bellomont died before the many reforms he had in contemplation were given an opportunity to assume tangible or practical shape.

Robert Hunter, who came out in 1710 as governor, belonged to a different type of man from any of his predecessors. He had descended from an old Scottish family and arisen from an apothecary's apprentice to a major-general in the English army, having served under the late King William and the Duke of Marlborough. His marriage to a peeress had brought a fortune and political power to him. He had been appointed successor to Lord Lovelace, governor of New York, having previously been nominated lieutenant governor of Virginia, but was captured in transit by a French privateer and carried back to Europe. He was a man about town, thoroughly equipped as a French scholar—many of his letters on file in the State Library at Albany bearing testimony to that effect—an accomplished writer, a trained diplomatist, a courtier, liberal in his ecclesiastical views, with a pardonable prejudice in favor of the Church of England. America had already become the haven of the persecuted of all countries. In the eighteen years between 1678 and 1696, the population of New York City had nearly doubled, advancing from three thousand four hundred to six thousand, while the population of the province had swelled to thirty thousand persons. The infamous practice of transporting felons to America and the detestable slave trade which had now been substantially established, produced upon the cause of labor the most pernicious effects, stamping it with the stigma of disgrace in the one instance and involving a contraction of wages in the other.

From the first Hunter won the respect of the colonists. In his opening address to the Assembly he declared he should endeavor by a most impartial administration to demonstrate he had "nothing more at heart than the welfare and prosperity of the country." All his official transactions bear the mark of superb tact. During one of the periodical mutinous outbursts of the Assembly, the annual appropriation bill for the maintenance of government was killed. In his address at the opening of the succeeding session the Governor felicitously assured the Assembly that he would leave nothing undone on his part to maintain the "good understanding between us, upon which in a great measure the quiet and prosperity of the country depends." He was accused, as he expressed it, of being "arbitrary, illegal, grievous, oppressive, unjust and destructive"—"the softest terms to my administration"—but if there were color for these expletives, he declared himself not only "unfit to govern but unworthy to live." He asserted that his interests were identical with those of the colonists, which he "took to be far from being incompatible with those of the Crown."

It was General Hunter who was called upon to meet the vexatious Palatine proposition. With an eye to the subjugation of Canada, for the development of British commercial resources, and at the same time to strengthen the frontier, English politicians conceived a scheme to colonize several thousand Palatines in New York. Free transportation was given them, and Governor Hunter was expected to secure lands upon which they were to settle. To sustain them until they became self-supporting, the British government gave him a grant of £10,000. At the outset he encountered a discouraging obstacle from the reprehensible practices of his predecessors, who, to nullify the opposition of the House of Representatives, subsidized the members by presents of large grants of land which were either rented at extortionate rates to cultivators or held for exorbitant prices by speculators. The average governor was no more than a landjobber, and regarded the sacred trust and responsibility reposed in him as mere stepping-stones to the acquisition of a fortune. Governor Hunter was keenly sensitive of the delicacy of his position. To the Board of Trade he wrote, under date of May 7, 1711: "I have met with great opposition from many of the ill-disposed inhabitants, who dayly insinuated that there were better lands for them on the fronteers." He tried to convince the settlers there were no pines on the frontier lands to enable them to follow the work they were destined for, making pitch, turpentine and tar, but they were recalcitrant and threatened to remove from Livingston's Manor to Schoharie. When the Palatines became too belligerent the Governor disarmed them and revoked all military commissions issued to them. A year later the Governor reported that he had "at length exhausted all money and credit," he "was master of for the support of the Palatines" and embarrassed "with difficulties which I know not how to surmount if my bills of exchange be not paid." He is not discouraged, however, "having such ample orders from her Majesty to subsist them that I doubt not her goodness to reimburse me." He had the "testimony of a good conscience in having done all that depended" on him for the support of the Palatines. The experiment involved a loss of twenty thousand pounds sterling.

General Hunter had served the Crown and the colonists faithfully and well. He unquestionably missed the gay society of London, and the society of London was never more gay and attractive than during the reigns of Anne and of the first George. This accomplished man of the world had been out of it nine years, and none of the charms of New York could equal those of the Haymarket, or the superior attractions of those gathering places of the brilliant wits and celebrities of London, White's, Will's, Child's or St. James coffee-houses, where all his old friends were wont to gather of an evening and discuss politics over their tobacco and their bottle. Moreover, his financial interests in England were large, and the necessity of attending to them, united with failing health and his advancing years, forced him to surrender his charge.

His farewell speech and the reply of the Assembly reflect the cordial relations which existed between the representatives of the Crown and of the people. The Governor assured the Assembly as long as he lived he would be "ever watchful and industrious to promote the interests and welfare of this country, of which I am under the strongest obligation." He looked with pleasure on the "present quiet and flourishing state of the people" and recalled "on how" he found them upon his arrival. "The very name of party or faction seems to be forgot." The response of the Assembly was, up to that time, unprecedented in the annals of the province for good nature. It dwelt upon "your just, mild and tender administration;" you have governed "well and wisely, like a prudent magistrate, like an affectionate parent."

Hunter's successor, William Burnet, was the son of the learned and pious Bishop of Salisbury, who was dismissed by his king for delivering at the chapel at Rolls Court a sermon on the text: "Save me from the lion's mouth; thou hast heard me from the horns of the unicorn." Burnet lost a fortune in the South Sea bubble, which Walpole had earnestly warned the people of England against. He, like Hunter, was a cultivated man, with a reputation as an author and astronomer. He married the daughter of a wealthy Dutch merchant of New York, Abraham Van Horne. Burnet made but few changes in the Council. He established relations of cordial fellowship with the colonists in his opening address by declaring he was "sensible of my unfitness to fill the room of my incomparable predecessor."

Burnet devoted his abilities and resources in promoting the interests of the colonies; he crushed the profitable French trade in Indian goods between Albany and Canada; he paid for the building of the fort at Oswego out of his own private funds; he was frugal in his expenditures, careful in managing, diligent in protecting the charges intrusted to him and strove sedulously to maintain the confidence of the Assembly.

The Palatine question had not been settled and continued to be a source of annoyance. The Germans had abandoned the Livingston tract on the Hudson and wandered to "the promised land of Schoharie," "a fortnight's journey thro' the snow which there covered the ground above three foot deep;" where "the misery those poor and almost famished creatures underwent were incredible." Like Hunter, Burnet was an exceptionally strong and upright governor. He found the Palatines torn with dissensions; "the cunningest among them fomenting their divisions" with the sole purpose in view of depopulating the district, in order that the large expanse of territory acquired by the Palatines from the Indians should revert to the few families that would remain.

Burnet in 1721 erected the first English settlement in western New York at Niagara for the purpose of capturing the Indian fur trade from the French, and a few years later, in 1727, carried out a plan that was formulated by Lord Bellomont—the construction of a stone fort at Oswego. Both Hunter and Burnet performed their duties in a manner that was consistently honorable and conscientious, and left behind them with the colonists a popularity which none of their predecessors or successors ever attained.

Upon the death, March 10, 1736, of Governor William Cosby, whose avarice and piracy brought frequent disturbances with the Assembly, the colonists looked to Rip Van Dam, the wealthy and distinguished merchant and senior member of the Council, as the logical successor. But the relations between the authorities and the Governor were not improved or harmonized, when it was learned that Governor Cosby, acting within his prerogatives, had suspended Van Dam the previous November and had failed to promulgate the order. The Council, ignoring Van Dam's protest and his refusal to recognize the legality of the suspension, administered the oath of office to George Clarke and issued a public proclamation, declaring him to be president of the Council. Against Van Dam's popularity with the people, Clarke received the support of the party of influence—the aristocratic party. Van Dam demanded the seals on the ground that as senior member of the Council he was entitled to them, but Clarke shrewdly submitted the case to the King and Van Dam was discomfited.

When the new Assembly met, June 15, 1737, Lieutenant-Governor Clarke delivered a diplomatic speech, in which he trusted "everyone in his representative station and country may endeavor to carry to perfection the good harmony that has already happily begun in the province to which nothing shall be wanting on my part," assuring himself "of the utmost success through your assistance."

This speech was not received in a particularly friendly manner by the Assembly, for on the 7th of September they brought in "an humble address" which reflected the angry, rebellious spirit which was gradually growing throughout the colony. They declared that, "no government can be safe without proper checks upon those intrusted with power, and the wisest governments, where the chief magistrates were elective, took especial care that it should not continue long in the same hands, experience having taught them that men, how much soever esteemed, had really not virtue enough for so great a trust, and generally used it ill when they had it;" that, "the true causes of the deficiency in the revenue" were due to extravagance, and that "the miserable condition to which the province is reduced renders the raising of large sums very difficult, if not impracticable."

They "beg leave to be plain with your honor and hope you will not take it amiss when we tell you that you are not to expect that we either will raise sums unfit to be raised, or put what we shall raise into the power of a governor to misapply it if we can prevent it; nor shall we make up any other deficiencies than what we conceive are fit and just to be paid, and continue what support or revenue we shall raise for any longer time than one year, nor do we think it convenient to do even that, until such laws are passed as we conceive necessary for the safety of the inhabitants of this colony, who have reposed a trust in us, for that only purpose, and which we are sure you will think it reasonable we should act agreeable to, by the grace of God we will endeavor not to deceive them."

During the greater part of the terms of office of Governors Hunter, Burnet, Montgomerie and Cosby, England had reposed under an unprecedented era of peace because of the determined policy of her great prime minister, Robert Walpole. This rough, unsmooth and cynical statesman saw no glory in killing men and no credit in harvesting a huge war debt. When France and Spain entered into the compact to deprive England of her commercial advantages in America—Spain to divert the American trade to France, and France to aid Spain on the sea, particularly in the recovery of Gibraltar from England—Walpole promptly let down the bars and permitted the Carolinas and Georgia to export their rice to any part of Europe. From Cromwell's time the hostility to a large standing army, and to the billeting of troops upon the people in times of peace, had been inflexible. The antagonism, however, had been softened by the wise act of Parliament during the first year of the reign of William, which declared that the mutiny bill and the appropriation bill for the support of government must be passed annually. In New York, however, for over a quarter of a century, the appropriation bill had continued for a period of five years at a time. At the outset of his administration Governor Clarke—who had asserted “the constitution of the government is such as his Majesty by his commission to his governor directs, whereby the Governor with the Council and Assembly are empowered to pass laws not repugnant to the laws of England”—the Assembly, merely following the example of the English parliament, limited the appropriation bill to one year. Governor Clarke rebelled against the proceeding; but the Assembly was firm, and in the end the Governor accepted the situation.

Twelve years later Governor Clinton and the Assembly were in collision because, as the Assembly called it, of “the arbitrary and illegal conduct” of the Governor in endeavoring to rehabilitate the so-called permanent support bill, in contradistinction to the annual appropriation bill. Walpole had at last been frozen out of office; the war with Spain was in progress—for, as Walpole sardonically put it, when the declaration of war was made, “they are ringing the bells now; they soon will be wringing their hands.”

Clinton brought to his office all the swaggering airs of a swash-buckler. The second son of the Earl of Lincoln he was bred to the sea and in 1716 commanded a ship. Sixteen years later he was appointed governor of Newfoundland and commodore of the British squadron. In 1743 he was transferred to New York,* where he remained as governor until 1753. By temperament, education and

* Dunlap quotes Dr. Abeel's description of New York City in 1744-1746: “On the hill, near the run of the fresh Water [Collect Pond, the site of the Tombs] to the East River was a wind-mill. Some years before this, there was a wind-mill between what is now called Liberty and Courtlandt streets. Here it was that less than forty years ago, the Indians still residing in the lower parts of the state, at particular seasons of the year, came to the city and took up their residence until they had disposed of their peltry, their brooms and shovels, trays and baskets. I have seen wheat growing, in 1746, where St. Paul's Church now stands. Then there were not twenty houses from Division street to Fresh Water. disposition he was utterly unfit for the position of governor. He was lazy, indifferent, truculent and careless; and, saturated with the environment of nobility, he made no effort to conceal his contempt for the colonists. He ridiculed the Assembly as a gathering of "ordinary farmers and shopkeepers of no education or knowledge in public affairs or the world," and declared that "the greatest members are foreigners or of foreign extract, many of which do not understand the English language and are generally led by some cunning attorney or reader of pamphlets." The permanent support bill was the rock on which he and the Assembly finally split. Clinton was instructed by Whitehall to push this measure, and in his endeavors was royally supported by the home government and by the King. The Assembly resisted the proposition with obduracy and at times with violence. They groaned under "the grievous and heavy burdens of taxes born" by the province, and declared that the success attending the annual support bill justified its continuance. The Governor denied access to the Assembly committee that was delegated to carry the remonstrance to him. In retaliation the Assembly fulminated another address, in which the Governor's conduct was denounced as tending "to the destruction of all intercourse between the several branches of the legislature and the utter subversion of the Constitution of this Colony." The address further declared "whoever advised his Excellency" "is an enemy to the General Assembly."

come down the East and North Rivers, and land their cargoes in the basin near the Long Bridge [at the foot of Broad street]. They took up their residence in the yard and store-house of Adolph Phillips; there they generally made up their baskets and brooms as they could better bring the rough material with them than the ready made articles. When the Indians came from Long Island, they brought with them a quantity of dried clams, strung on sea-grass, or straw, which they sold—or kept for their own use, besides the flesh of animals, &c. Clams and oysters and other fish, must have formed the principal food, together with squashes and pumpkins, of the natives of the lower part of the state."

From the day the government party under the lead of Governor Cosby had been defeated in their attempt to crush John Peter Zenger the liberty of the press was recognized as one of the established institutions of America. Of this institution the colonists were tenaciously jealous and proud. The press had never found a friend in royalty or encouragement from any one subsidized by royalty. As soon as its influence pricked the public mind in England it was throttled by a system of licenses. Henry VIII drove it into insolvency by star chamber proceedings. Elizabeth abased it by humiliating and rigorous restrictions. The Long Parliament never displayed any sympathy for it, but vied with royalty in shackling it. Immediately after the Restoration, however, several rays of light fell upon the cause, particularly by the passage of the act to regulate printing. This statute expired by limitation in 1679. The Parliament was then in no mood to restore the censorship. The press had no friend in Charles II, but, though it was manifestly a thorn in his side, he showed no disposition to restrict its liberty. After the death of Queen Mary, King William endeavored to revive the censorship, but both houses of Parliament rejected the proposition; nor has the movement ever been renewed. During the reigns of the first two Georges greater progress was made by the press in America, where more stirring and exciting events were happening than in England, where an era of torpor and quiet prevailed. Any menace or threat, open or implied, in any way affecting the press, was at once resented by the colonists. The charge of attempting to restrain the liberty of the press was now made by the Assembly against Governor Clinton, who was flatly informed that all the governors were mere beggars—sent over to enrich themselves at the expense of the colonists. The Governor retorted, "you have no regard for decency!" He prorogued the Assembly time and again; ridiculed its assumptions of authority, and declared its intention to wrest the administration of affairs from the hands of his Majesty's Governor. He complained to the home office and to the King.

The Assembly continued its headstrong, warlike policy. They not only took patronage away from the Governor, but in effect controlled all the nominations in the colony; assumed full charge of all the fortifications, regulated the appointment of gunners and the distribution of gunpowder. Relations were severely strained and Clinton was reluctant to meet the Assembly "without danger of exposing the King's authority and myself to contempt." He writhed under the encouragement the Assembly received from the disinclination of the home government to let him proceed to extremes and dwelt upon the treatment they accorded him—"they have shamefully slandered and insolently treated the person and character of his Majesty's Governour of this province."

The instructions to Clinton's successor, the brother-in-law of the Earl of Halifax, Sir Danvers Osborne, who hanged himself five days after his arrival in this country, convey a fair reflection of the relations maintained between the representatives of the King on one side and of the people on the other. Having stated that great disputes existed between the several branches of the legislature, the document proceeded to say, that the peace of the province in consequence had been disturbed, government subverted, peace obstructed and the prerogative trampled upon; that the Assembly had refused to comply with the commissions and instructions respecting money raised for the supply and support of government, and had assumed the disposal of public money, the nomination of officers and direction of the militia and other troops, the commander-in-chief was enjoined to endeavor to quiet the minds of the people, to call together the Council and Assembly and in the strongest and most solemn manner to declare the King's high displeasure at their neglect and contempt to exact due obedience, to recede from all encroachments, to demean themselves peaceably, to consider without delay of a proper law for a permanent revenue, solid, indefinite and without limitation. And this occurred the year before the Albany Congress of 1754, where Benjamin Franklin's plan for a general government was first disclosed.

Of the many men who exercised a wide and vigorous influence over the province for many years, Chief Justice James De Lancey and Cadwallader Colden stand conspicuous. In one sense of the word they were rivals, for they were recognized at different times as the power behind the throne. Both were men of transcendent ability, lacking in the vices that rendered so many governors obnoxious. De Lancey had been Governor Clinton's closet adviser at the beginning of his term. A native of Albany, he had graduated from the University of Cambridge, England, had adopted the profession of the law, practised politics, had been appointed by Governor Cosby Chief Justice of the province and recommended to Clinton as a shrewd adviser. Unfortunately he had quarrelled with Clinton "over their cups," joined the opposition, stirred up as much strife and discord as he was capable of, but relented upon learning that the commission for lieutenant-governor had been issued to the governor for him. Although De Lancey made delicate approaches toward the governor, the commission was withheld.

De Lancey was tactful and extremely puritanical in his methods. There was never any equivocation in his position, practical politician though he was. As the representative of the people, he found himself between two horns of a dilemma when he assumed the administration of affairs. The Crown and the Assembly both claimed sovereignty. It was necessary for him to mollify both without offending either. He was the first native-born American who had been honored with the office of governor, and the people in their selfish exactions failed to realize the obligations he was under and the duty he owed to the Crown. Clinton had accused him of talking one way to him and another to the Assembly, but De Lancey's disinterestedness was demonstrated when he vetoed the legislative bill which appropriated for him as lieutenant-governor the same salary which had been given to Clinton as governor, stating as his reason that it was inconsistent with the royal instructions. The conflict between the people and the Crown over the control of the executive department was well nigh irreconcilable, and De Lancey was expected to harmonize the differences. The Assembly declared in an address to the King that they had been maliciously misrepresented. The Lords of Trade responded with acerbity. They charged the Assembly with the management and disposal of public money, and of usurping the functions of the Crown generally. The reply of the Assembly was rejected by order of the King. Matters proceeded from bad to worse. Secretary Robinson wrote De Lancey expressing his concern that the Assembly were unwilling "to exert themselves in what is now so essentially the common cause of all the colonies." The same day the Lords of Trade expressed surprise over the Assembly's "conduct in so perilous a situation." The French and Indian war was now well under way and the colonists were not disposed to surrender their prerogatives, when a rapacious and tyrannical governor might arrive at any moment and squander the appropriations they provided.

In the meantime New York prepared energetically and patriotically for the war that was upon it. No colony possessed a larger or more exposed frontier or a more important seacoast. Money was promptly voted. Troops were quickly raised. The war situation grew so grave that the Lords of Trade were disposed to yield. Governor Sir Charles Hardy had arrived and brought with him a letter in which the Lords of Trade commended New York for the vigorous measures of defence that had been made.

The truce however was but short lived. The New York Assembly complained that other colonies were permitted to make appropriations in a manner that was denied this province. The question of executive sovereignty was again debated with the Lords of Trade on one side and the representatives of the people on the other. At the height of the turmoil, De Lancey, who had done more for the colony than any other governor in a generation, died September 30, 1760. Before the end of the year George III ascended the throne and Cadwallader Colden became acting governor of New York.

Colden was one of the best equipped, best informed, all around governors of colonial times. Since 1718, when he was appointed surveyor-general by Governor Hunter, he had enjoyed the unlimited confidence of each succeeding administration. When Clinton and De Lancey fell out Colden succeeded to the post of chief adviser of the governor, and common rumor gave him credit for writing all the former's state papers. He was a native of Scotland, a graduate in medicine of the University of Edinburgh, a scientist of high standing, an author of international reputation, a politician of the obsequious order, and a student who had made the needs, resources and possibilities of the province a specialty. Without the tact or the solidity of De Lancey, he brought to the position of governor, which he was called upon to fill five times between 1760 and the outbreak of the Revolution, certain commendable qualifications never discovered in any of his predecessors.

With the accession of the new King, a fresh conflict was threatened. All commissions expired with the sovereign. Bench and bar of the province were unanimous on the interpretation of law and the remedies necessary for the protection of the bench and of the people. In the defence of the liberties of the people they were also a unit. They resented the proposition now before them that judges should hold office only "during his Majesty's pleasure" instead of "during good behavior." The Court of Chancery had been the pet of Governor Burnet and had involved him in difficulties innumerable, owing to his inconsiderate conduct while playing the rôle of Chancellor. He was no lawyer, but scattered decisions with a gusto and an abandon that swept the breath away from the people who watched his remarkable exhibitions in the dispensation of justice. A violent protest arose against "the extraordinary proceedings" of this court, whose "violent measures," it was claimed, had ruined some persons and driven others out of the colony. Resolutions denouncing it were adopted and the Assembly intemperately threatened to pass an act to nullify all its proceedings. New York had manfully protested against the interference of the executive power with the courts—a policy that was consistent and that was to be followed in the adoption of the first State Constitution; the courts were justified in attacking the power of the executive, but the executive must keep hands off the courts. When Benjamin Pratt was imported from Boston and commissioned as Chief Justice, the Assembly flatly and indignantly refused to vote his salary. His colleagues on the bench presented a protest to Colden declining to serve unless their new commissions read as their old ones, "during good behavior." Pratt alone, of all the judges served, "during the pleasure of his Majesty" at the expense of his private means, until the lieutenant governor directed that his salary be provided for from the quitrents—receipts belonging to the King from the vast tracts of uncultivated lands which had been granted before 1708.

Despite the impositions that had been inflicted, New York was never parsimonious in providing for her governors. Considering the large sums annually appropriated and the extraordinary amounts supplied from time to time for war expenses, for the defence of the frontier and for the home government, the province was extremely liberal in maintaining her royal functionaries. Nor should the estimation in which the governor was held by the colonists be overlooked. In the governor all the dignity and majesty of the province and of the Crown were crystallized. His power was absolute, if not despotic. He not only made the laws, but interpreted and executed them and, when necessary, unmade them. He usurped the prerogatives of the Assembly and of the courts; the Council were mere automatons who danced when he pulled the string. No act of the Assembly was placed on the statute book without his signature, and no decision of the court was valid until he, as chief justice, passed judgment; and in this respect he exercised powers denied to the King, for his Majesty while permitted to sit on the King's bench was prohibited from expressing judgment. Time and again the governor was threatened with removal; now and then charges were preferred against him, and once the grand jury was urged to indict him for high treason. The governor who displayed an interest in his trust beyond the financial was an anomaly. None of them ever seemed to dream of the future possibilities of the colony. He found it a rich field for plucking, and he took advantage of opportunities as he found them. If at times his methods of government were unduly severe, the motives which inspired him, the baneful influences behind him, and the circumstances surrounding him, should in fairness be considered. Unfortunately, neither the governor or the colonist ever manifested a disposition to put himself in the place of the other. The colonist regarded the governor as a tyrant, the governor looked upon the colonist as a yokel. The former was not in a position to understand the constant pressure under which the governor labored from the home office, and from the Lords of Trade, to raise money to meet the chronic financial embarrassments of government; for when England's exchequer ran low, her colonies, from India to America, felt the squeezing process to the limit.

For the times the governor's salary was munificent. As far back as 1700 his compensation was fixed at £1,500 with perquisites amounting to £1,000 or £1,200 additional—consisting of funds for maintaining a garrison at the fort and for the defence of the frontier. Governor Cosby, who first suggested the stamp act and was suppressed by Robert Walpole, who was responsible for the firing of the first gun for the liberty of the press in America, and whose flagitious greediness and wastefulness led Lewis Morris to demand his removal, was handsomely provided for. He received as a salary £1,560, with emoluments of £150 to pay his expenses to Albany, £400 out of supplies for the fort, with another stipend to purchase presents for the Indians and a present of £750 as a lobbyist, against the sugar bill before Parliament—a measure that was regarded as inimical to the prosperity of the colony. Every governor who came to New York poor returned to England with a fortune. The shrewdest of all was Clarke, who first appears as secretary of the province under Cosby; then as a member of the Council. He disparages New York and discourages candidates for governor from crossing the ocean because of the wretched prospects he pictures to them, while he industriously gathers in affluent fees, and at the end of seven years carries home to England the snug fortune of one hundred thousand pounds sterling. Better educated than Clarke, but with less natural ability, Clinton acquired the comfortable competency of £80,000 during his sojourn in New York. Even persons so puritanically disposed as De Lancey and Colden were not beneath dividing the emoluments of the governor, when their chiefs left them in charge of affairs, De Lancey with Sir Charles Hardy, who preferred to command the naval expedition against Louisburg, and Colden with General Robert Monckton, when the latter took command of the Martinique expedition. Up to the time of Dunmore, the Assembly faithfully voted the governor's annual salary of eighteen hundred pounds sterling, with the usual garnishings for Indians, visits to Indians, supplies for the fort, visit to Albany, always the occasion for great formality and solemnity, as a sloop was especially fitted up for the accommodation of "his Excellency" and suite, for the "long and perilous voyage." But when the taxes of the province were swelled beyond all reason for the burdens demanded in maintaining Indian, French and border wars and for the protection of the frontier, the King considerably forbade Dunmore, and his successor Tryon, from accepting any gift above their salary, which was fixed at two thousand pounds. The French and Indian war left a public debt of £300,000, and the colonies uncomplainingly paid the £40,000 annual tax exacted from them in addition to the oppressive disbursements that were laid upon them for supplies and troops.

In spite of the dragging demands imposed upon them, and the exorbitant sums that were wrung from them, the colonies continued to bound forward toward prosperity and imperial ascendancy, with an impetus that excited in the covetous mind of the master and his myrmidons, a cupidity that evolved fresh schemes for taxation which were to bring upon England consequences analogous to those which Samson brought upon the Philistines when he pulled the pillars from the temple.

By the nature of the impositions, extortions and tyranny that were practised upon the colonists, by the contempt with which they regarded and in return were regarded by, the rapacious and unconscionable governors, by the ignominy with which their petitions and addresses were treated by the Crown authorities at home and abroad, by their impotence in deriving any encouragement in their efforts for reform or improvement, it is not to be wondered at that submission should give way to protest, protest to opposition, opposition to resistance, resistance to revolution and revolution to independence.

CHAPTER II.

THE FIRST CONSTITUTION OF NEW YORK STATE.

MARCH 31, 1774, the Boston port bill became a law. May 16th the citizens, friends and enemies of England in New York held a meeting at Samuel Fraunce's tavern at Broad and Dock streets, a favorite assembling place for the people of the town. A committee of fifty-one was appointed, with Isaac Low as chairman, to discuss the proper policy to be pursued and to correspond with the other colonies "upon all matters of moment." Three days later these proceedings were ratified at Fraunce's tavern by a vast assemblage of the inhabitants. May 23d, in the forenoon, the committee again met and appointed from its number a subcommittee of representative men, consisting of Alexander McDougall, Isaac Low, James Duane and John Jay, to draft an answer to a communication from the Boston Committee of Correspondence, with instructions to report at "8 P. M." In this communication which has been credited to Jay occurs the first practical proposition for "a Congress of deputies from the colonies in general;" "that it ought to be assembled without delay and some unanimous resolutions formed in this fatal emergency, not only respecting your deplorable circumstances, but for the security of our common rights."

The first Continental Congress which convened in Philadelphia September, 1774, resulted from this suggestion, united to the resentment of the colonists against the obstinate and tyrannical aggressions of the Crown. New York was represented by five delegates, who were unanimously elected July 28th by the freeholders, freemen and other taxpayers upon the platform of a "non-importation" agreement. Jay's usefulness and ability were given ample scope, for, in addition to serving on several active committees, he drafted the famous "address to the People of Great Britain," which contained these memorable words: "that we consider ourselves, and do insist that we are and ought to be, as free as our fellow subjects in Britain, and that no power on earth has a right to take our property from us without our consent. * * * That we hold it essential to English liberty that no man be condemned unheard or punished for supposed offences without having an opportunity of making his defence. * * * You have been told that we are seditious, impatient of government and desirous of independence. Be assured that these are not facts but calumnies. Permit us to be as free as yourselves and we shall ever esteem a union with you to be our greatest glory and our greatest happiness; we shall ever be ready to contribute all in our power to the welfare of the empire; we shall consider your enemies as our enemies and your interest as our own. * * * Place us in the same situation that we were at the close of the last war and our former harmony will be restored."

This address, written in the seclusion of a small room in a tavern, whence Jay retired for greater privacy, was warmly commended by Thomas Jefferson, before its author was known, as a production "of the finest pen in America."

The Congress itself was a conservative, unique body. It possessed no powers to speak of; certainly none to create legislation or to enact laws. It was a convention more for the propagation of harmony between the colonies and the Crown, or to seek redress for recognized grievances, or of protest against what was properly regarded as impositions and persecutions; and for recommending a better and more ameliorating condition of things. It entertained no thought of revolution, or of independence, or of separation from the mother country. Its members were strangers to one another; it was cohesive in that it had in view one common end, and it was patriotic in that it assembled for the common good, for the security and happiness of all.

Its principal efforts recommended the non-importation and non-consumption of British goods, with suitable town and county committees to carry its recommendations into effect. Then after a six weeks' session, the Congress having made provision for the meeting of its successor, the following May, adjourned sine die.

Jay and his colleagues returned to New York with flying colors. They had gone to Philadelphia under suspicion, if not discredited, by a large fraction of the people. The radicals, Plebeians, Republicans or Mechanics, as they have been variously called, regarded their representatives not as Whigs or Democrats, but as Aristocrats or Patricians, who were susceptible of surrendering their convictions and their trust to the Crown. But now the Mechanics presented a cordial address that removed all prejudice. The representatives in turn responded with a counter document, which was written by Jay, which closed with these words, and which intensified the good feeling already engendered: "To soften the rigour of the calamities to which in this tempestuous season we may be exposed, let us all with one heart and voice endeavour to cultivate and cherish a spirit of unanimity and mutual benevolence and to promote that internal tranquillity which can alone give weight to our laudable efforts for the preservation of our freedom and crown them with success."

Following the recommendation of Congress, the New York Committee of Correspondence, November 22, 1774, dissolved and was succeeded by the Committee on Inspection, consisting of sixty members. This in turn proved to be inadequate to the pressing needs of the hour and in turn, May 1, 1775, gave way to the committee of one hundred—the constitutional government having practically gone out of existence—the Committee on Observation, or, in other words, the Revolutionary Committee of Safety. Since the adjournment of Congress, Jay had served on the Committee of Correspondence and of Inspection, on the Committee for the Relief of Boston, been elected to the Provincial Convention, which remained in session only a few days, and appointed a delegate to the second Continental Congress. His time and abilities, therefore, were in constant demand in maintaining correspondence, drafting reports and addresses, and in rendering advice.

When the second Continental Congress convened in Philadelphia, May 10, 1775, the country had plunged into the horrors of war. Many members, of optimistic tendencies, still hoped for redress of grievances; many others discussed the question of separation, deliberately, and cold bloodedly. An army was raised—an army of defence rather than of offence. Jay's peaceable propensities regarded the thought of war with dismay; he had believed in negotiation, or what modern statesmen call arbitration, up to the hour the second Continental Congress met; he had had more faith in the pen than in the sword, but he now entered with determination and spirit into the policy that dictated defence for the country and resistance to her enemies.

Eleven days after the third Provincial Congress of New York convened at the City Hall, New York City, Jay, on May 25th, took his seat as a delegate. A grave proposition confronted this body: should New York establish its own constitutional form of government? For over a year Jay had been sitting as a delegate in the Continental Congress and now his own province demanded his services, exclusively. Accordingly, the Provincial Congress passed a resolution requesting his presence in New York and directing him not to leave without further orders. He promptly left Philadelphia on receipt of the notification and repaired to New York. He had for some time seen the necessity for a change in the system of government, but as yet had formulated no plan. At his suggestion a series of resolutions were adopted calling upon the people to elect delegates to a new Convention. Jay was one of the delegates chosen from New York City.

New York at this time was one of the most beautiful cities in America. The city was well governed and well groomed. The streets were narrow, generally paved with brick and shaded by beautiful trees. The houses were plain, substantial and commodious. The merchants were thrifty, conservative and prosperous. Imports, exports and domestic trade were increasing in a steady and healthy manner. The markets were renowned for delicacies, and nowhere could be procured such varieties in game, fish and vegetables. The lawyers ranked with those of any of the other colonies in erudition, ability and cultivation. Ship-building had developed to proportions to excite the envy of other cities. Up to March, 1775, the temper of the people had been well restrained. The great bulk, the tax-paying class, were unquestionably loyalists. But the frequent elections and the attendant agitations had produced a feeling of unrest that strengthened and intensified as day succeeded day and as the Crown continued its policy of oppression and repression. Back of the manifest fidelity to the Crown lay an inherent sentiment, undeveloped, intangible, chaotic, that only awaited provocation to burst into revolution and independence. The sympathies of the people were about evenly divided: the older and conservative men favored submission; the younger element, which included the hot heads, clamored for the Congress, for Liberty and Equality. The press attained national prominence and exerted no little influence in fomenting disorder by ill-advised utterances antagonistic to the Sons of Liberty and favoritism for England. Handbills and pamphlets were scattered over the land to influence public sentiment in behalf of liberty on one hand or of royalty on the other. At weeks for a time the air was charged with conflicting rumors that kept the nerves and the minds of the people on a constant and wearing tension. Nor was the situation at all benefited by the slow methods of transportation by sea and by land. The arrival of every ship and of every post found the coffee houses and the exchanges filled to overflowing with expectant citizens, assembled to discuss the latest news from abroad or from the other colonies. South Carolina's general committee had already declared "the present struggle seems to us most glorious and critical" and considered "this season as big with American glory." England had denounced the citizens of Massachusetts and many other patriots in the respective colonies as rebels, and had marked Samuel and John Adams, Robert Treat Paine, John Hancock, John Dickinson and Peyton Randolph for execution. This puissant nation had determined to crush the rebellious American spirit with all the power she controlled. Three great generals had been ordered to accompany the next assignment of troops to America—Sir John Burgoyne, Sir Henry Clinton and Lord Howe. New York's conservatism and her unwillingness to declare her choice induced a writer in Holt's Journal from Wethersfield, Conn., to assert that the ministry had been promised by leading New Yorkers that the province would desert the cause of liberty. "It is no time now to dally or be merely neutral. He that is not for us is against us," he continued. "If you desert, our men will as cheerfully attack New York as Boston; for we can but perish, and that we are determined upon or be free."

But the sentiment in New York had already begun to crystallize toward the inevitable. The New York association had been formed "under all the ties of religion, honor and love to our country, to adopt and endeavor to carry into execution whatever measures may be recommended by the Continental Congress or resolved upon by our provincial convention for the purpose of preserving our constitution and opposing the execution of several arbitrary and oppressive acts of the British Parliament, until a reconciliation between Great Britain and America, on constitutional principles (which we most ardently desire), can be obtained." This association brought to the front the earnest patriots of New York. The loyalists were spellbound by the consequences. The most active participants were Isaac Low, a Church of England man, of marked ability, ambitious, with clear cut and advanced ideas on the necessity of separation of the colonies from England; James Duane, John Jay, Alexander McDougall, Robert R. Livingston, Thomas, John and Joshua Hett Smith, brothers of William Smith, Peter R. Livingston, and Peter Van Brugh Livingston. Washington had been appointed Commander-in-chief of the American army by the Continental Congress, and the day he arrived in New York, June 25, 1775, on his way to Boston, was a memorable one. The same day Governor Tryon had returned from England, where he had been for some time on leave of absence. With Washington came Generals Lee and Schuyler, the latter bound for Albany to command the Canadian expedition then fitting out. The American generals were conducted to the residence of Leonard Lispenard, a mile and a half north of the city, escorted by several patriotic volunteer companies, the members of the Provincial Congress, the rebel parsons and hundreds of patriots, who gave vent to their feelings by loud acclamations, repeated shouts and vociferous huzzas. At nine o'clock the same night Governor Tryon sailed up from Sandy Hook and received almost as noisy a demonstration as the three American generals. In the meantime the law courts of England had been abandoned in the province, except in the county of Westchester, where the final term ended at White Plains, in April, 1776, the judge, Thomas Jones, having been placed on the act of attainder of New York, because he had released from custody several persons who had been arrested by the committee of Westchester for expressing sentiments of loyalty to the crown, the court holding they were guiltless of any crime against the law of the land.

Under date of June 29, 1776, Edward Rutledge from Philadelphia wrote to Jay: "I write this for the express purpose of requesting that if possible you will give your attendance in Congress on Monday next. I know full well that your presence must be * * * useful at New York, but I am sincerely convinced that it will be absolutely necessary in this city during the whole of the ensuing week. A declaration of independence, the form of a confederation of these colonies and a scheme for a treaty with foreign powers will be laid before the House on Monday. * * * I trust you will contribute in a considerable degree to effect the business, and, therefore, I wish you to be with us. Recollect the manner in which your colony is at this time represented. Clinton has abilities, but is silent in general and wants (when he does speak) that influence to which he is intitled. Floyd, Wisner, Lewis and Alsop, though good men, never quit their chairs."

July 6th, from New York, Jay replied to Rutledge: "Your friendly letter found me so engaged by plots, conspiracies and chimeras dire, that though I thanked you for it in my head I had no time to tell you so either in person or by letter. * * * How long I may be detained here is uncertain, but I see little prospect of returning to you for a month or two to come. We have a government you know to form—and God only knows what it will resemble.”

Two distinguished New Yorkers, delegates to the Continental Congress, failed to subscribe to the Declaration of Independence, because at this juncture their own State demanded their services—and in those days, states rights was all potent—one the soldier and statesman, George Clinton, subsequently the first governor of New York and fourth vice-president of the United States, who was hurried by order of General Washington from Philadelphia to the banks of the Hudson to assist in repelling the enemy in the invasion of his State; the other, the jurist and statesman, John Jay, afterward the first chief justice of the State of New York, the first chief justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, minister to England and second governor of New York, whose state assembly in the exercise of its prerogative of states rights over continental authority restrained him from attending the sessions of Congress for the reason that his state claimed original jurisdiction over his official actions. Both Clinton and Jay, after the adoption of the Federal Constitution, were honored on several occasions with votes for the office of President of the United States.

The constitutional history of New York dates from the adoption of the Declaration of Independence. May 15, 1776, Congress adopted the following resolution:

“Whereas his Britannic Majesty in conjunction with the lords and commons of Great Britain has, by a late act of Parliament, excluded the inhabitants of these United Colonies from the protection of the crown; and whereas no answer whatever to the humble petitions of the colonies for redress of grievances and reconciliation with Great Britain has been or is likely to be given, but the whole force of that kingdom aided by foreign mercenaries is to be exerted for the destruction of the good people of these colonies; and whereas it appears absolutely irreconcilable to reason and good conscience for the people of these colonies now to take the oaths and affirmations necessary for the support of any government under the crown of Great Britain, and it is necessary that the exercise of every kind of authority under the said crown should be totally suppressed, and all the powers of government exerted under the authority of the people of the colonies, for the preservation of internal peace, virtue and good order, as well as for the defence of their lives, liberties and properties against the hostile invasions and cruel depredations of their enemies."

The day before Congress adopted this resolution, the Provincial Congress of New York, which had been elected in April, met in the city of New York. The Congressional resolution came up for consideration ten days later. There was more or less debate on the proposition, whether this Congress had the power to go beyond the authority that had been delegated to it by the people, and whether it should not at once proceed and draft a state constitution. Gouverneur Morris, the member from Westchester, and one of the youngest members of the Congress, after a lengthy speech, moved for the appointment of a committee "to draw up a recommendation to the people of this colony for the choosing of persons to frame a government for the said colony."

John Morin Scott opposed the proposition in a lengthy address, and declared his opinion that this Congress has power to form a government "or at least that it is doubtful whether they have not that power and that therefore that point ought to be reserved." He favoured the appointment of a committee that should consider this proposition.

Mr. Sands of New York moved an amendment to Mr. Morris' motion for the appointment of a committee "to take into consideration the resolutions of the Continental Congress of the 15th May inst. and report thereon with all convenient speed." This proposition was adopted and the following committee was appointed: John Morin Scott, John Haring, Henry Remsen, Chairman, Francis Lewis, John Jay, Abraham Cuyler, and John Broome.

May 27th, this committee brought in a report which in the opinion of Benjamin F. Butler, at one time Attorney-General of New York, "is worthy of special notice as one of the earliest and most explicit expositions of the doctrine of the popular sovereignty put forth in this State." The report stated, "that the right of framing, creating or new-modelling civil government is, and ought to be, in the people; that as the present form of government, by Congress and committees in this colony originated from, so depends on, the free and uncontrolled choice of the inhabitants thereof; that the form of government was instituted while the old form of government still subsisted," and is necessarily subject to defects which could not be remedied by new institutions; "that by the voluntary abdication of the late Governor Tryon, the dissolution of our Assembly for want of due prorogation, and the open and unwarrantable hostilities committed against" the colonies by British fleets and armies, the old form of government has become dissolved; that doubts having arisen "whether this Congress are invested with sufficient authority to frame and institute such new form" of government; "that those doubts can and of right ought to be removed by the good people of this colony only." In conclusion the report suggested that it was left for the people themselves to determine whether the Congress "in conjunction with the representatives of the other counties respectively" shall be competent to create a new form of government by "adding to their number if they so think proper or by electing others in the stead of the present members or any or either of them and increasing (if they should deem it necessary) the number of deputies from each county with the like powers as are now vested in this Congress."

The report was accepted and referred to a committee consisting of Mr. Scott, Mr. Jay and Mr. Haring, who whipped the subject matter into appropriate resolutions. That committee submitted the result of its labors on the 31st. The report was drawn by Mr. Jay, and, among other propositions, requested the people of the county to elect "their present deputies or others in the stead of their present deputies or either of them, to take in consideration the necessity and propriety of instituting such new government as in and by the said resolution of the Continental Congress is described and recommended." The report was adopted without opposition.

Up to the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, Jay had acted strictly in accordance with the sentiment of the people of his State and under the instructions of the Provincial Congress of New York. On December 14, 1775, the Provincial Congress had "resolved unanimously that it is the opinion of this Congress that none of the good people of this colony have withdrawn their allegiance from his Majesty." June 11, 1776, the subject of independence was again under consideration, and this resolution was unanimously adopted, "That the good people of this colony have not, in the opinion of this Congress, authorized this Congress or the delegates of this colony in the Continental Congress to declare this colony to be and continue independent of the crown of Great Britain."

Outside of New York, however, events were occurring that converged with unerring certainty upon independence. From the moment the King's speech from the throne, in the preceding October, was known in this country, a decided change in public sentiment occurred. On January 5, 1776, the House of Representatives of New Hampshire formally adjourned, having adopted a constitution for the State, and made a public declaration of independence, the royal governor fleeing the colony. April 15, 1776, the Georgia Provincial Congress adopted a temporary constitution, and ratified the permanent constitution in convention, February 5, 1777. Rhode Island formally renewed its state constitution May 1, 1776, having under its charter simply dropped its allegiance to England.

In Virginia, the State convention was now in session, the delegates having been required to pledge themselves for independence before they were elected. Conspicuous among the representatives were men who were destined to fill large places in the history of their country—Patrick Henry, James Madison, George Wythe, George Mason, Edmund Randolph, Edmund Pendleton, Richard Henry Lee, Thomas Nelson, Thomas Ludwell Lee, Richard Bland, Archibald Cary and Bartholomew Dandridge.

On May 14th arose the question of independence, which was under consideration for two days, the debate finally closing by the adoption of a series of resolutions which instructed the Virginia delegates to propose to the general Congress "to declare the united colonies free and independent states, absolved from all allegiance to or dependence upon the crown or Parliament of Great Britain."

The resolutions also suggested that the colonies form "foreign alliances and a confederation of the colonies at such time and in such manner as to them shall seem best."

That same day, by a singular coincidence, the Continental Congress recommended that each colony should establish its own form of government.

July 9, 1776, the newly elected convention of New York, a rebel congress, pure and simple, met at White Plains. The old régime had ceased to exist; royalty was supplanted by republicanism; the New York Congress became the "Convention of the Representatives of the State of New York." From the representatives in the Continental Congress a copy of the Declaration of Independence had been received. It encountered neither delay in its presentation, nor opposition in its consideration. A committee was appointed at the morning session and submitted its report at the afternoon session, through its chairman, John Jay,—in the shape of a series of resolutions which approved the course of Congress in adopting the Declaration of Independence; "while we lament the cruel necessity which has rendered that measure unavoidable" "and will at the risk of our lives and fortunes join with the other colonies in supporting it;" which directed that the Declaration and the resolution be published "with beat of drum at this place on Thursday next;" gave instructions for its dissemination throughout the State and for the publication of five hundred copies in handbills to be sent to all the county committees in this State, and finally "that the delegates of this State in Continental Congress, be and they are hereby authorized to consent to and adopt all such measures as they may deem conducive to the happiness and welfare of the United States of America."

John Jay, the chairman of this committee, of all men in the State at the time, was most competent, by heredity, by environment, and by ability, to fill the important trust that had been reposed in him. Descended from an old Huguenot family, impressed with the persecutions that had driven his ancestors from the shelter of their homes, he had attained his thirtieth year, on the twelfth of the preceding December. Up to the final break between the colonies and England, Jay was known more as a reserved and sedate student than as a man of affairs. But from his entrance into public life, his transcendent abilities soon forced him into the front rank of the little patriotic band of New Yorkers and his advancement became rapid. No man in the northern states performed more varied work in the preparation of addresses or more effective work on the numerous committees on which he was placed.

The convention resolved to begin the formation of a State government on July 16th, but the enemy seriously interfered with their plans. Washington had practically determined to abandon New York. British men-of-war patrolled the Hudson within seven miles of the place where the convention was deliberating. The time of the representatives was monopolized in providing for the troops in the field and for the public defence. The courts of law had been abolished, but the convention ordained that all magistrates and civil officers, well affected toward independence, should continue to exercise their duties, except that processes hereafter must issue in the name of the people of the State of New York; it was furthermore declared to be treason, and punishable by death, for any person living within the State, and enjoying the protection of its laws, to adhere to the cause of England or to levy war against the State.

July 27th, the convention was forced to retreat to Harlem, and there, on August 1st, was appointed the committee to draft the constitution—an able committee, composed of the most distinguished lawyers in the State—John Jay, Gouverneur Morris, Peter R. Livingston, William Duer, John Morin Scott, John Sloss Hobart, Robert and Abraham Yates, John Broome, Henry Wisner, William Smith, Charles DeWitt and Samuel Townsend. The brunt of the work fell upon a subcommittee of three: namely, Messrs. Jay, Morris, and Speaker Livingston. The most industrious of the three was Jay.

Never was an instrument of momentous consequence drawn amid such turbulent surroundings, under such disquieting circumstances and with such distracting accompaniments as the first constitution of New York.* Admiral Howe had arrived in lower New York bay with his fleet; his younger brother, Sir William Howe, the general, had landed at Staten Island with his army from Boston. The northern and western frontiers were in an excited state over rumors and the fear of an Indian uprising under Sir John and Guy Johnson. New York city trembled in the throes of a panic. Her militia was hastily thrown together and earthworks were hurriedly

* In his speech condemning the abuses perpetrated under the Council of Revision, Peter R. Livingston of Dutchess uttered the following sentiments concerning the first constitution, before the Constitutional Convention of 1821:

"It would be necessary to draw the attention of this body to that period of time, when our constitution was formed. We all know it was adopted in an hour of extreme peril, amidst the noise of musketry and the thunder of cannon; and is it to be wondered at, that their deliberations, under such circumstances, were in some measure erroneous? And is it not a matter of wonder under such circumstances, that you have a constitution, containing so much merit and so much wisdom, as the one under which we now live? At that time it was necessary to give that negative power, which is found in the third article of the constitution [the Council of Revision]. At that time the southern district of your state, which contained its greatest weight of population, was possessed by the enemy. Your northern frontier was literally laid waste by the savage. You then gave a power to the convention, which you never would give under the present circumstances. What they did at that period was binding on the people—what you do now the people are to pass upon. There was in this state more disaffection than in any other part of the Union. Every thing depended on your executive; and you then had a patriot to direct the destinies of the commonwealth. You imposed the most implicit confidence in his integrity, his courage, and his patriotism. The framers of the constitution were afraid that the legislature might be destitute of patriotism, and encroach upon the liberties of the people. This state of things no longer exists. Then you had nothing to apprehend from the man who was the governor of the state. He was fighting with a rope round his neck. Had the revolution terminated differently from what it did, he would have been made one of the first examples."

constructed at advantageous positions that commanded the land and water approaches to the town. The fortifications in the highlands of the Hudson, which were regarded as the key of the military position in the North, were pushed along as vigorously as the slender means and the limited resources of the colonies would permit, while the commanders called for reinforcements that could not be procured and for armament that could not be supplied. The colonists were handicapped as to fighting material and restricted as to war implements, and fully realized their shortcomings. But they proceeded in spite of the depressing influences to the manufacture of brass field pieces, iron siege guns, and small arms, at the same time scouring the country for saltpetre for the manufacture of powder, and lead for the manufacture of bullets. Never in the history of the world had a civilized country with an extended sea-coast deliberately gone to war without the semblance of a navy. The United States in this respect occupied an anomalous, unprecedented and isolated position. But the ingenuity, energy and practical adaptability of her people supplied the defects from which she most suffered. One resourceful patriot promptly suggested "fire ships" to combat the English men-of-war; another "privateers" with which to prey upon and destroy English merchantmen. Before six months had elapsed, New York ship builders had begun the construction of men-of-war. In the meantime the Constitutional Convention had been hunted from place to place as if the delegates were outlaws; its members invariably went armed; its sessions were held with the warning cry "the enemy are coming" impending. From the promulgation of the Declaration of Independence, the British had placed to their record an unbroken line of victories. The unvarying reverses received by the Americans would have discouraged and disheartened a people less sturdy and plucky. The committee to frame the constitution pursued its duties in spite of the multitudinous obstacles that confronted it. Jay retired from the convention, so his son informs us, to a secluded place in the country, the better to carry out the work he had in hand. He was ploughing in an untrodden, uncultivated field. He had no constitutional compass to guide him. His months of intimacy with the studious, intelligent and scholarly men of the colonies had broadened his views, and emphasized those great general principles of government on which all agreed, and magnified those lesser problems on which there was a natural and honest divergence of opinion. The question of a written or an unwritten constitution opened as wide an area of discussion as that other, equally important, whether each state should create its own constitution or whether Congress should draw a general and a uniform one for the government of all. It was pointed out that England had been ruled for centuries by an unwritten constitution, composed of traditions, customs and precedents, it is true; and in spite of the notoriously corrupt conditions that then existed, England was admitted to be the best governed country in the world. Should the new constitution contain the essential features of a despotism, or of an absolute or of a limited monarchy or of a pure democracy? Many of the strongest and most prominent men in the colonies, whose distrust of the Crown was pronounced and insuperable, regarded with suspicion the critical problem of placing in the hands of the people the untried power of regulating and managing the executive functions of a new and an independent commonwealth.

With the exception of a few general principles and the constitutions of the five states which had adopted their autonomous form of government before the Declaration of Independence—New Hampshire, South Carolina, Georgia, Virginia and New Jersey—the material which Jay and his colleagues found to work from was not at all appropriate for their purpose. Even the Virginia constitution, masterly though it was, offered only slight advantages, for a constitution acceptable to the people of Virginia was not suitable for the people of New York. Both states contained a large proportion of Aristocrats and Democrats, Tories and Whigs, Patricians and Mechanics, as they were variously denominated; but in Virginia the Democrats or Whigs preponderated, in New York the Aristocrats or Patricians. Jay and his fellow members on the subcommittee were classed as Aristocrats, however Whiggish they may have been in their inclinations.

The percentage of college-bred men was exceedingly small. Education lay within the reach of a favored few. As late as 1755 complaints are heard that education is neglected. "The instructors want instruction" was a common saying. Ordinary speech had been corrupted; the habit of reading thrust aside for sports and gambling. In mitigation of the loose and careless predilections of the people, however, the scarcity and costliness of books, were important factors. The majority of publications in the public libraries consisted of theological works. Private libraries in the province were rare—the two best known before the Revolution were owned by Governor Montgomerie, who possessed 1,341 volumes, and the Historian Smith, one thousand works, including pamphlets. All things considered, the constitution builders of New York were compelled by force of necessity to depend upon inspiration more than upon substantial material. It is true that for a bill of right they had as a model Coke's Petition of Right of 1628, a classic in its way, and Lord Somers' Bill of Right, which was proclaimed in 1689, which restrained William and Mary from mounting the throne until they had subscribed to it, and which has been regarded as the most comprehensive declaration of the form of government ever written. From Tacitus on the "Manners of the Germans," Locke's "Treatise upon Civil Government," Mr. Justice Blackstone's "Commentaries," which appeared in 1765, and Montesquieu on the "Spirit of Laws" with the Constitution of England as his model, they could extract suggestions and ideas on general forms of government, more applicable, however, to a monarchy than to a republic. Franklin's plan of confederation was susceptible of several suggestions.

With characteristic modesty, John Adams claimed in his old age, in a letter to Mercy Warren, that the constitution of New York was taken from his "Thoughts on Government" in a communication he had made early in the year 1776, to George Wythe of Virginia, a copy of which Richard Henry Lee had transmitted to Patrick Henry during the formative period of the Virginia constitution. In forwarding his "Thoughts on Government" to Patrick Henry later on, Adams wrote: "It has ever appeared to me that the natural course and order of things was this: for every colony to institute a government; for all the colonies to confederate and define the limits of the continental constitution; then to declare the colonies a sovereign state or a number of confederated States; and, last of all, to form treaties with foreign powers."

As a matter of fact, there is but a very slight resemblance between Adams' scheme and the constitution that eventually was adopted by the state of New York. Adams' plan contemplated a bicameral form of government, comprising an assembly and a council, the latter to consist of twenty or thirty members, chosen by the assembly by ballot, with power to exercise a negative voice in the legislature. These two bodies, constituting integral parts of the legislature, in joint ballot, to select annually "a governor who after being stripped of most of those badges of domination called prerogatives should have a free and independent exercise of his judgment, and be made also an integral part of the legislature;" to have a privy council, to exercise the veto and pardoning power, and to be commander-in-chief of the forces; judges, justices and all other officers, civil and military, to be nominated and appointed by the Governor, with the advice and consent of Council, "unless you choose to have a government more popular; if you do, the officers, civil and military, may be chosen by joint ballot of both houses; or, in order to preserve the independence and importance of each house, by ballot of one house concurred in by the other."

Public sentiment throughout the colonies resisted any plan that would bestow upon the governors of the new states absolute power. There was a decided disposition to curb the executive authority by a council or some other restraining influence. On the other hand, unlimited confidence was universally expressed in the judiciary. Thomas Jefferson, in a letter to George Wythe, written presumably in June, 1776, or while the Virginia convention was in session, expressed himself as follows: "The dignity and stability of government in all its branches, the morals of the people and every blessing of society depend so much upon an upright and skillful administration of justice, that the judicial power ought to be distinct from both the legislature and executive, and independent of both, that so it may be a check upon both, as both should be checks upon that. The judges, therefore, should always be men of learning and experience in the laws, of exemplary morals, great patience, calmness and attention; their minds should not be distracted with jarring interests; they should not be dependent upon any man or body of men. To these ends they should hold estates for life in their offices, or, in other words, their commissions should be during good behaviour and their salaries ascertained and established by law."

It is a matter of deep regret that the members of the committee who framed our Constitution could not have left something more substantial than fragmentary evidence to show how it was drafted and the members of the convention more detailed records to show how it was adopted. Jay and Morris, who were its foremost exponents in committee and convention, were young men, the former Morris' senior by five years; both were enthusiastic and systematic. It is true Morris suffered under a ban. His loyalty had been more than once questioned in spite of his unswerving devotion to independence; his eldest brother, Staats Morris, held a commission as general in the British army; many of his relatives were Tories, and the malevolent spirit of the times was only too willing to charge unworthy motives and traitorous sentiments and affiliations to a conscientious patriot. Morris himself is on record in these words: "In the year 1776 I left all for the sake of those principles which have justified and supported the revolution. This sacrifice was made without hesitation or regret. * * * I have thought much, labored much, suffered much. In return I have been censured, reproached, slandered, goaded by abuse, blackened by calumny and oppressed by public opinion."

When requested years later to prepare his personal recollections of the Revolutionary War, he replied: "I have no notes or memorandum of what passed during the war. I led the most laborious life which can be imagined. * * * I would not trouble you, my dear sir, with this abstract of my situation if it did not appear necessary to show you why, having so many near relations of my own blood in our armies, I kept no note of their services. Nay, I could not furnish any tolerable memorandum of my own existence during that eventful period of American history."

The draft of the Constitution was submitted to the convention March 12, 1777. April 20th the formal adoption took place. Jay, whose industry and ability were stamped all over the instrument, failed to vote for it, for he had been summoned to the bedside of his dying mother at Fishkill. Inexperience and prejudice unmistakably entered largely into the draft of the original constitution of this State. In tone it was decidedly aristocratic and in sentiment decidedly English. It discredited the office of governor and it dis-trusted the people. The disinclination to invest the Governor with unlimited powers was, in view of the history of England and of the colony, perfectly natural. In the judiciary, however, the most abiding confidence was reposed; for despite the disgraceful brawls that occurred between the Governor and the Assembly in times past, and the bitter recriminations that were exchanged, there never was a time when the integrity of the judiciary was questioned. The Constitution was liberal in its religious sentiments in that it permitted "the free exercise of religious profession and worship without discrimination or preference to all mankind." Slavery was still tolerated, despite the efforts of Gouverneur Morris and Jay to provide for its gradual abolition.

The conservatism of the founders of the Constitution was displayed in their reluctance to abandon the old system of viva voce voting instead of casting a ballot, an innovation which was urged on the ground of better protecting the purity and independence of the system, and better preserving the liberty and equality of the people. The Constitution clearly defined the duties of the executive, the legislative and judicial branches of government. While tentatively maintaining the English distinction that the Governor corresponded to the King, the Senate to the House of Lords, and the Assembly to the House of Commons, it repudiated the English theory that the legislative branch should be recognized as the supreme power of the land, and established the special American feature of an absolutely independent authority between the legislative and executive departments.

Under the Virginia constitution the Governor was chosen by both branches of the Legislature for a term of four years, and, following the English idea, was assisted by a privy council of eight persons selected by the Assembly. New York adopted another course. The Governor's term of office was fixed at three years, but he was elected, as were the Lieutenant Governor and the Senators, by freeholders, actual residents possessed of freeholds of the value of £100, over and above all debts charged thereon. In a double sense, however, he was shackled—in the distribution of patronage and in his relations with the Legislature. A sinister expedient called the Council of Appointment, a creature of John Jay, who in the years to come lived to regret it, controlled all the political patronage of the State, and another cumbrous and absurd piece of machinery, devised by Robert R. Livingston, termed the Council of Revision, regulated all legislation. Of the councils of appointment and of revision the Governor was a member and president, but in both his influence was no greater than that of any other member. In the Council of Appointment he had only a casting vote. He was invested with a few individual responsibilities. He acted as general and commander-in-chief of all the militia and admiral of the navy; had power, on extraordinary occasions, to convene the Legislature and to prorogue it from time to time, but not to exceed sixty days in any one year; to grant reprieves and pardons under certain legislative restrictions; to report the condition of the State to the Legislature at every session; to submit recommendations which in his judgment concerned the good government, welfare and prosperity of the State; to correspond with the Continental Congress and other States; to transact all necessary business with the officers of government, civil and military; to see that the laws were properly executed and to expedite all measures the Legislature might resolve upon.

In adjusting the powers and authority of the Governor of the state of New York, the constitution makers failed to discriminate between a governor who was appointed by a king and a governor who was elected by the people, between an officer who served a master and one who served his peers, between one who would degrade those he governed to mere puppets and one who would treat them as sovereigns, between a foreigner who had no sympathy for his constituents and a native-born citizen whose sympathies and interests must of necessity be identical with those of the state and the people he represented. In depriving the Governor of prerogatives that of right should have belonged to his office, and in making the office a mere figurehead, the convention unconsciously created in the Council of Appointment an irresponsible, powerful and offensive political machine. The section of the Constitution that brought the Council of Appointment into existence reads:

“XXIII. That all officers, other than those who by this constitution are directed to be otherwise appointed, shall be appointed in the manner following, to wit, The Assembly shall, once in every year, openly nominate and appoint one of the senators from each great district, which senators shall form a council for the appointment of said officers, of which the Governor for the time being, or the Lieutenant-Governor, or the President of the Senate, when they shall respectively administer the government, shall be President, and have a casting voice, but no other vote; and with the advice and consent of the said council be a quorum. And further, the said senators shall not be eligible to the said council for two years successively."

The state at this time consisted of four great districts, and the manner of selecting the Council clearly indicates the powerful lever placed within the hands of its members to abase and prostitute the civil service of the state, each succeeding year, by removing from office every individual whose politics differed from theirs or a majority of them. If the Governor and the Council agreed politically, the opportunities for a disturbance at their meetings were nil; but when the Governor and a majority of the Council disagreed in politics, a conflict was inevitable. John Jay, when elected Governor, claimed the sole power of appointment. This claim was resisted by the Council. One of the two questions which the Constitutional Convention of 1801 was called upon to determine related to the line of jurisdiction between the Governor and the Council in disposing of patronage. The Council won, the convention bestowing a concurrent power of nomination upon the several members.

For twenty years longer this obnoxious machine continued, demoralizing the public service more and more as years went on, until the Convention of 1821 wiped it and its twin sister of iniquity, the Council of Revision, from the constitution of the State.

Since the experimental days of 1777, New York has been governed by six different constitutions. In view of all the remarkable changes, transformations, developments and innovations, in the arts and sciences, and in education, but little improvement has been made over the first instrument if we except the two Councils—of Appointment and of Revision. Many of the so-called new features or principles that had been engrafted into the constitution from time to time are, after all, but expedients, consequent not so much upon the necessity of changing or improving the basic law, as to meet some sporadic public agitation or to overcome some flagrant abuse that has followed the practices of a political party which has long been entrenched in power.

The framers of our first constitution are entitled to more credit than is usually given them, for the thoroughness and the ability with which they performed their duties. Their responsibilities were of an anomalous character. The absence of political parties and the natural agitation and controversies that are unavoidable during a campaign of partisan politics simplified their work, no doubt, in some respects. The magnitude of the undertaking cannot be appreciated unless an effort is made to imagine their environments at the time.

STATE CAPITOL, ALBANY, April 22, 1901.

MILITARY MINUTES OF THE COUNCIL OF APPOINTMENT.

THE Council of Appointment minutes are deposited in the office of the Secretary of State, Albany, and cover fourteen volumes of manuscript. The first, second and third volumes are composed of civil and military matters; volumes 4, 6, 8, 10, 12 and 14, civil appointments, and volumes 5, 7, 9, 11 and 13, military.

During the forty-four years of the existence of the first constitution, frequent demands were made for the publication of these records, but the Council invariably refused to comply. The constitution of 1777 failed to make provision for a new constitutional convention, as it failed to specify the time when the governor should begin his official duties. Governor Clinton was declared elected, July 9, 1777. He took his oath of office the same day. It was not until the act of February, 1787, was passed for regulating elections, that a specific date was established for the governor and the lieutenant governor to enter on the duties of their respective offices—the 1st of July, after their election.

When the first constitution was adopted, New York State was divided into fourteen counties: Albany, Cumberland, Dutchess, Gloucester, Kings, Montgomery, New York, Orange, Queens, Richmond, Suffolk, Ulster, Washington, Westchester. When this constitution went out of existence, the state was divided into fifty-three counties—the original counties of Cumberland and

Gloucester having become a part of the new state of Vermont—as follows, with the date of erection of the forty-one new counties:

Columbia, erected in 1786; Clinton, Ontario, in 1788; Herkimer, Otsego, Rensselaer, Saratoga, Tioga, in 1791; Onondaga, 1794; Schoharie, 1795; Steuben, 1796; Delaware, 1797; Chenango, Oneida, Rockland, 1798; Cayuga, Essex, 1799; Greene, 1800; Genesee, St. Lawrence, 1802; Seneca, 1804; Jefferson, Lewis, 1805; Allegany, Broome, Madison, 1806; Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, Cortland, Franklin, Niagara, 1808; Schenectady, Sullivan, 1809; Putnam, 1812; Warren, 1813; Hamilton, Oswego, 1816; Tompkins, 1817; Erie, Livingston, Monroe, 1821.

The subject matter contained in these volumes comprises the military appointments made by the Council of Appointment, beginning after the last name mentioned in "New York in the Revolution" to the adoption of the second constitution in 1821. In the thousands of names here presented will be found those of men who have been prominently identified with the history of the State in the arts, sciences and the law. Several governors and United States senators performed duty as militiamen during the good old times when the "training day" was one of the features of the year. Instances out of mind could be cited, but the following will suffice as to the character of the men and the service performed:

John E. Wool appears as adjutant and ensign in Major William Parker's battalion of Riflemen from Rensselaer County, June 5, 1811; William C. Bouck of Schoharie, afterwards governor, acted as adjutant of the Eighteenth Regiment. Theodoric Romeyn Beck acted as a surgeon in the Rensselaer Cavalry, February 29, 1812; William L. Marcy, Ogden Hoffman and Charles E. Dudley figured as ardent soldiers.

Chaplains were first appointed by the Council, June 8, 1808; horse artillery first appears on the records of date February 4, 1809, as "company" in contradistinction to "battery."

In the preparation of this material, it has been a source of unending regret that the State should have surrendered to the authorities at Washington all its records relating to the Second War with Great Britain. The few names now within the control of the State represent a very small fraction of the total number on file in the War Department at Washington.

The governors who served during the forty-four years of the first constitution, with their residences and the date of election, are as follows:

Names.	Residence.	Elected.
George Clinton	Ulster Co.	July 9, 1777
John Jay	New York city	April, 1795
George Clinton	Ulster Co.	" 1801
Morgan Lewis	Dutchess Co.	" 1804
Daniel D. Tompkins	Richmond Co.	" 1807
John Tayler*	Albany, Albany Co.	March, 1817
DeWitt Clinton	New York city	" 1817

(*Lieutenant governor, acting governor in place of Daniel D. Tompkins, elected vice-president of the United States.)

GEORGE CLINTON, GOVERNOR.

George Clinton, first governor of New York state; born at Little Britain, Orange County, July 26, 1739; ran away from home in 1755 and sailed from New York on a privateer; served as a subaltern in his brother's, James Clinton's company, of their father's regiment, during the French and Indian war; studied law and was admitted to the bar in the city of New York; served during the Colonial period as surrogate of Ulster County, 1765-1766; member of the Colonial Assembly, 1768-1775; during the transition period as a member of the Committee of Correspondence, Provincial Convention; Provincial Congress; Continental Congress; brigadier general in the continental army; governor of New York 1777-1795; delegate to and president of the convention of 1788 called to ratify the Federal Constitution; first chancellor of the University of the State of New York; governor of New York 1801-1804; vice president of the United States 1804 to 1812; county clerk of Ulster county 1759-1812; died at Washington, D. C., April 20, 1812, in the seventy-third year of his age; buried in the Congressional Cemetery, Washington.

KINGS COUNTY.

Rutger Van Brunt, lieutenant colonel.*

Daniel Rapalje, first major; John Covenhoven, second major.

1784.
May

* The rank of colonel in this state was abolished by act of the legislature, under the law passed April 4, 1782, entitled "An act to regulate the militia," section 4, which reads:

"That in case of the death, resignation or other inability, to serve of any colonel now commanding a regiment, no colonel shall thereafter be appointed thereto. That such regiment and all others not now commanded by a colonel shall henceforth be commanded by a lieutenant-colonel."

Chapter 25, laws of 1786, provided: "That each regiment shall be commanded by three field officers, viz.: One lieutenant-colonel commandant and two majors."

Lambert Suydam, captain of the troop of horse; Hendrick H. Suydam, first lieutenant; John R. Covenhoven, second lieutenant; Rem Hageman, cornet, and John Nostrant, quartermaster of the said troop.

Nicholas Van Brunt, captain of a company in the township of New Utrecht; William Berry, first lieutenant; Arent Van Pelt, second lieutenant; Abraham Durye, ensign.

Samuel Garretson, captain of a company in the township of Gravesend; Hendrick Van Cleef, lieutenant; John Johnson, ensign.

Andrew Suydam, captain of a company for the township of Flat Bush; John C. Van de Veer, first lieutenant; Nicholas Wyckhoff, junior, second lieutenant; Daniel Bennum, ensign.

May 8, 1792, the Congress of the United States passed an act, "More effectually to provide for the national defence by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States," in which the provision was made: "That the said militia shall be officered by the representative states as follows: * * * ; to each regiment one lieutenant-colonel commandant." This act was re-enacted and put in force in New York state by chapter 45, passed March 9, 1793. All subsequent state militia legislation was based upon the United States act of 1792 for many years.

The lieutenant-colonel commandant continued as the ranking officer all through the war of 1812, and until May 1, 1816, when the Fourteenth Congress passed an act which is known as "chapter 64," in which it was provided: "That from and after the first day of May next instead of one lieutenant-colonel commandant to each regiment, * * * there shall be one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, and one major to each regiment of militia."

July 8, 1816, the Council of Appointment of New York adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the several persons now holding the commission of lieutenant-colonel in the several regiments of infantry, artillery, cavalry, horse artillery and riflemen of this state be deemed and respected as colonels from and after the first day of May next and that their relative rank as colonels shall be the same as their present rank. That all first majors be deemed and respected as lieutenant-colonels and shall have the same relative rank as lieutenant-colonels which they now have as first majors, and the said lieutenant-colonels and first majors are hereby respectively appointed to said offices with such relative rank accordingly.

Resolved, That the adjutant-general forthwith cause a list or roster of the lieutenant-colonels and first majors embraced in the preceding resolutions, with the dates of their respective commissions, to be made out, certified and filed in the office of the secretary of state and that the secretary issue new commissions to them as colonels and lieutenant-colonels respectively with rank from the dates of their present commissions according to the act of Congress passed 20th April, 1816."—STATE HISTORIAN.

John Titus, captain of a company for the township of Bushwick; Peter Colyer, lieutenant; John Skillmore, ensign.

Barrent Lefferts, captain for the east division of Brooklyn; Jeremiah Van der Bilt, lieutenant; Christian Durye, ensign.

The first of the great struggles between the Federalists—those who believed in the centralization of power—and the Republicans, or anti-Federalists—those who advocated a simple confederation of the States—occurred in 1789. In New York State Alexander Hamilton was generally regarded as the leader of the former and Governor George Clinton of the latter. To counteract the powerful influence exercised by Governor Clinton, the national administration placed into the hands of Hamilton all its patronage. The purpose of this was twofold: to destroy Governor Clinton's usefulness as a factor in politics and to lift the Federals into the control of the politics of the State. Up to this time Governor Clinton had encountered no opposition to speak of. The enmities he had naturally created, the jealousies aroused and the factions started had not crystallized into open opposition until the Governor's pronounced hostility to the Federal constitution gave to his political enemies the very opportunity they had long been looking for. His fourth term as Governor was to expire in July, 1789. It was a difficult matter to find an available candidate to run against him. In spite of the popularity of the Federal administration and the far-reaching power of its patronage, it was conceded that a break must be made in Governor Clinton's own ranks if his defeat were to be encompassed. The Federalists admitted they could succeed only by making a coalition with certain anti-Federalists. Accordingly, on February 11, 1789, the Federalists held a meeting in the city of New York and selected as their standard bearer Robert Yates of Albany, one of the judges of the Supreme Court, who had been appointed through Governor Clinton's friendship, who had been recognized as a leading anti-Federalist, who had withdrawn from the Philadelphia National Convention, and who had, as delegate to the State convention that was called to ratify the Philadelphia convention, spoken and voted against the new Federal constitution. February 24th, Judge Yates formally accepted the nomination. Three days later, Chief Justice Richard Morris of Westchester, who was favored by many Federalists, renounced the proposition to nominate him. Of the 12,353 freeholders who were then allowed to vote for Governor, Clinton received 6,391, Yates 5,962 votes. The Federalists carried the counties of New York, Westchester, Dutchess, Columbia, Albany and Montgomery. Governor Clinton was the only nominee on the Republican or anti-Federalist ticket who was elected. The county of Ulster, where he began his public career, saved him, for out of 1,245 votes cast he obtained all but 106. The Council of Appointment consisted of Samuel Townsend of Queens, Peter Van Ness of Albany; Generals John Hathorn of Orange and John Williams of Charlotte (Washington), all anti-Federalists.

At this session of the Legislature a bill was passed providing for the election of two United States senators, but it was vetoed by the Council of Revision. A two-thirds vote of the Legislature not being available to revoke the action of the Council of Revision, the Legislature by joint resolution appointed General Philip Schuyler and Rufus King as United States senators from New York.

January 15, 1790. Philip Livingston of Westchester, John Cantine of Ulster, Philip Schuyler of Albany, and Edward Savage of Washington, were chosen as members of the Council of Appointment. Messrs. Livingston and Schuyler were Federalists; Cantine and Savage Republicans. At this time General Schuyler held the positions of State Senator, Member of the Council of Appointment and United States Senator. January 27, by a vote of 34 to 22, the Assembly adopted a set of resolutions in effect that it was incompatible with the principles of the United States Constitution for a person to hold an office under the United States government and a seat in the State Legislature at the same time, and that a person appointed or elected to an office under the Federal government should vacate his seat in the Legislature. The Senate also adopted the resolutions, but General Schuyler never surrendered.

Periodically an agitation arose that demanded the publication of the proceedings of the Council of Appointment. January 22, 1791, the matter took formal shape in the Assembly by the adoption of the subjoined resolution on motion of Mr. Cornelius J. Bogert of New York:

Resolved, That the honorable the Council of Appointment of this State be informed that it is the sense of this House that the journal of their proceedings ought to be published at the close of each of their sessions, in the newspaper printed by the printer to this State; and that the speaker of this House transmit a copy of this resolution to his Excellency the Governor.

On February 15, Governor Clinton in a brief message to the House submitted the following copy of the entry of the proceedings of the Council of Appointment, which read:

At a meeting of the Council of Appointment, held at the city hall, in the city of New York, on the eleventh day of February, 1791. Present: His Excellency the Governor, Isaac Roosevelt [of New York], Alexander Webster [of Washington], Peter Schuyler [of Montgomery] and Thomas Tillotson [of Columbia].

His Excellency the Governor laid before the Council a resolution of the honorable the Assembly, of the 22d of January last, expressing it as their sense that the journals of the proceedings of the Council of Appointment ought to be published at the close of each of their sessions, in the newspaper printed by the printer for this State. Whereupon, the Council having taken the same into consideration, conceive it incumbent on them to observe that as the manner in which they are to proceed in the execution of the business committed to them is prescribed by the Constitution, and by the statute for organizing the government of this State, and the minutes of their proceedings declared to be public records, and placed in the custody of the secretary of the State; it would, therefore, in their opinion be improper, and might subject them to reprehension, if at the instance of one branch of the Legislature the Council should depart from regulations so established.

And the Council further beg leave to observe that, even if this objection could be obviated, they would still find themselves in a delicate situation, not having the power to exact the performance of the measure required or the means of defraying the expense attending it.

Resolved, That his Excellency the Governor be requested to transmit a copy of the preceding entry to the honorable the Assembly.

Extract from the minutes.

Robert Harpur, Clerk of the Council.

JANUARY

The State election of 1792 was the most spirited since the adoption of the State Constitution. The Federalists had strengthened their party organization under the skillful leadership of their resourceful leaders. Every advantage had been taken of the mistakes committed by the anti-Federalists, who were in power; no effort had been spared to weaken and destroy Governor Clinton's influence. As a preliminary to the opening of the campaign, a savage attack was made upon Governor Clinton by the Federalists in the Legislature for his agency and partiality in the sale of the public lands. The war was carried into every county, and the general result unquestionably proved injurious to the Governor. At the same time, the Federalists suffered for the want of an acceptable candidate. Judge Yates declined a renomination; the patroon, Stephen Van Rensselaer, would listen to no argument; Chancellor Livingston's name was mentioned now and then, more or less favorably, and Chief Justice John Jay, though regarded as the best equipped and strongest candidate in the estimation of the politicians, refused his consent. Aaron Burr had begun to marplot against friend and enemy in the game of national politics. His ambition was unbounded. The governorship of New York was to be used as a stepping stone to that loftier office which he all but succeeded in grasping, a few years later.

John Jay had held a greater variety of public offices than any other man in New York State. As a member of the Provincial Congress; of the Committee of One Hundred; of the Continental Congress; as president of Congress; as regent of the University; as a boundary commissioner, and as minister to Spain, he had acquired a vast fund of knowledge of public affairs and of human nature, which, properly applied, would prove of incalculable advantage to his State. Upon his return from Madrid, he was trebly honored. The city of New York presented him with the freedom of the city in a gold box; the State of New York with the appointment of delegate to Congress; the Congress with the responsible position of secretary for foreign affairs. As secretary he had opened up to him all the weaknesses and deficiencies of the articles of confederation. Thus he was enabled to join Hamilton and Madison as a powerful contributor to the Federalists in the plan to form a strong central government. His popularity had been tested in 1788, when he received all but 98 out of 2,833 votes, in running as a delegate from the city of New York to the State convention called to ratify the Federal constitution. With Washington, Jay had always been a great favorite. It was not surprising, therefore, that the first President, upon the organization of the national government, should have offered to Jay any office within his gift. Jay selected that of chief justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, but acted as Secretary of State, at the request of Washington, until Thomas Jefferson reported for duty at the seat of government. In 1785 he had declined to take the nomination for Governor of New York, although warmly importuned by his most intimate friends; but in 1792, though preferring the more congenial life of a jurist, he finally yielded to the solicitations of his friends, who had been reinforced in the movement by Washington. The State canvassers, consisting of a joint committee of both branches of the Legislature, six from each house, convened on the second Tuesday in June, 1792. A dispute arose among the canvassers over the right of canvassing and accepting the returns from the counties of Clinton, Otsego and Tioga. Under the law the sheriff of each county was required to transmit the ballot boxes to the Secretary of State. The votes of Clinton county were delivered to the Secretary of State by a person not legally qualified, although he had received them from the sheriff of the county; those from Otsego were forwarded by a hold-over sheriff; and those from Tioga were received by the Secretary from a clerk of the special deputy appointed by the sheriff. Unable to reach an agreement, the State canvassers submitted the questions in dispute to the two United States Senators, Rufus King and Colonel Aaron Burr. The former expressed the opinion that the votes of all three counties should be accepted. Colonel Burr favored the canvassing of the votes in Clinton county, but believed that the votes in Otsego and Tioga counties should be rejected. A majority of the canvassers concluded to reject the votes from the three counties, and under the law their decision was final. This decision defeated John Jay; for, had the votes in Otsego county been counted, his election would have been assured. Clinton's majority was one hundred and eight.

The Assembly this year selected as members of the Council of Appointment David Pye of Orange, Philip Van Cortlandt of Westchester, Stephen Van Rensselaer of Albany, and William Powers of Columbia. The first two were Republicans and the last two Federalists.

The Federalists controlled the legislature of 1795. General William North of Albany county was elected speaker of the assembly over James Watson of New York, another Federalist. Confined to his bed by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism, Governor Clinton, instead of his usual speech, transmitted a written message to the legislature that had assembled at Poughkeepsie, January 6th. In this document he made the first recommendation for appropriations for the improvement and encouragement of the common schools of the State. The council of appointment consisted of Richard Hatfield of Westchester, William Powers of Columbia and Jacobus Van Schoonhoven of Albany, Federalists, and Joseph Hasbrouck of Ulster, a Republican who was chosen by a unanimous vote.

It was during this session of the legislature that Governor Clinton formally declared his intention to retire to private life. He had passed nearly thirty of his fifty-six years of life in office. Subjoined is the address as it appeared in the Albany Gazette, January 30, 1795:

To the freeholders of the State of New York:

Fellow citizens: It having been for a considerable time my intention to decline being a candidate at the ensuing election for governor, I have tho't proper to communicate it to you in this public manner, in order that those who might have been disposed to honor me with their suffrages, may have an early opportunity of turning their attention to another person.

To those who know the declining condition of my health, it will be unnecessary to state any reasons for this determination. For nearly thirty years, I have been employed, without intermission, in different elective offices, which for the greater part of the time have engrossed my whole attention; and I now find it essential to the re-establishment of my health, and feel myself required by the duties I owe to my family, to withdraw from a station never solicited by me, which I excepted* with diffidence, and from which I shall retire with pleasure.

* So in original.—STATE HISTORIAN.

It has been my invariable object to promote and cherish the republican system of government, as well from a sense of duty as from a full conviction that it is the only one calculated for the happiness and dignity of men. That I may have frequently erred in this pursuit, I readily admit; and I sincerely wish that my successors, with intentions equally pure, and with the same object in view, may be more successful.

I cannot conclude without expressing to you the warmest emotions of a grateful heart for the repeated and signal proofs of your confidence and affection, and for the efficient aid and support rendered to my administration, as well in the perilous and gloomy scenes of the revolution as in the auspicious period of peace and national prosperity.

JOHN JAY, GOVERNOR.

The retirement of Governor Clinton encouraged the Federalists with the hope of victory at the forthcoming gubernatorial election, in April. There is no doubt that next to Clinton in popular esteem stood John Jay. Many of Alexander Hamilton's friends urged him to accept the nomination for governor, but Hamilton adhered to his determination not to run for any important elective office. Jay at the time was in England acting as the special envoy of this country to remonstrate with the British government against repeated violations of the treaty of 1783. The celebrated Jay treaty was signed November 19, 1794, but its contents were not known in this country until July 2, 1795, three months after the State election. In the meantime Jay had been nominated by the Federalists for governor and the patroon Stephen Van Rensselaer, of Albany, for lieutenant governor, at a legislative caucus. At the election held in April, 1795, these gentlemen were elected over the Republican candidates, Chief Justice Yates and William Floyd. Two days after the state board of canvassers announced the result of the election, May 26, Jay arrived at New York from the Court of St. James. July 1, 1795, he was sworn in as governor. He had resigned his office as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States June 29.

No event in our history so disturbed the public peace and threatened the very foundation of our government as the treaty which Judge Jay negotiated with the English government. The treaty had been received by the Secretary of State March 7, 1795. In conformity with the call of the president, the Senate met June 8 and the treaty with the documents connected with it was submitted. A resolution was promptly adopted imposing secrecy, but on June 26, two days after the Senate by a bare constitutional vote ratified it conditionally, the injunction of secrecy was removed, and Senators were merely enjoined against authorizing or allowing any copy of the document or of any part of it. Vague mutterings and malignant criticisms against the treaty had already been heard and the public mind was rapidly approaching that inflammatory stage where reason is unavailing. Through a breach of Senatorial courtesy, an abstract was furnished to the editor of the Philadelphia Aurora, Benjamin Franklin Bache, who had been the most virulent critic of the Federalists and the administration, and whose vitriolic pen often turned upon Washington himself, with unsparing severity. The Republicans were fully organized, while the Federalists were wholly unprepared for the contest which was now to sweep the country with an intolerance and a malignancy surprising and unreasonable. Opposition to the treaty had been insidiously engendered by the Jacobins by the mysterious manner in which the negotiations had been conducted and for the mysterious secrecy which marked the Senate's deliberations. The fact that it had been considered behind closed doors, that the Senators had been pledged to secrecy, that the sympathy of the administration was pro-English, and that the attitude of the president was uncertain and not known by his most intimate friends, added fuel to the excitement that was now raging furiously. Englishmen were insulted, and the English flag was torn down and trampled in mud. In Philadelphia an effigy of Jay was placed in the pillory and when finally removed was guillotined, the apparel burned, the body blown up. In Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston and many other cities, meetings were held and the treaty and Jay violently denounced. In Albany a riot occurred on Green street between the Republicans and Federalists, and several persons were seriously injured. In New York, at a great public meeting, Alexander Hamilton attempted a defence of the treaty, and to stay violent prejudices by argument and reason, and was driven from the contest by the jeers of the mob and a volley of stones, one of which struck him on the forehead. "In the face of such striking arguments I must retire," he is reported to have said. The whole tumult was wild and irrational. Of the people who were condemning Jay and the treaty, a very small per cent. had any conception what it all meant, and a smaller percentage had not ever read the treaty. It was unreasonable that a document carrying many complex problems of international importance that could only be worked out by the statesman in the quiet of his library should be thoroughly comprehended by the mob without examination. The friends of the administration divined the objective point of the opposition and rallied their forces in defence; for petitions by the score and letters by the hundred were pouring in upon Washington to influence him against approving the treaty. Hamilton, Rufus King, then one of the Senators from New York, and Jay are responsible for the "Camillus" letters, which defended the treaty, which supported the administration, and which, in the course of the year, effectively accomplished the purpose for which they were prepared, to convert public sympathy in favor of the treaty and its author. The majority of these papers was written by Hamilton, a few by King, Jay lending the great weight of his knowledge as counsellor.

SARATOGA COUNTY.

The Council proceeded to consider the report and proceedings of the board of officers in the county of Saratoga composed of General (James) Gordon, president; Colonel John Vandenberg,

Colonel Epinetus White, Colonel John Ball and Colonel Thomas Rogers, members who sat at the house of Salmon Tryon at Ballstown Springs in said county on Monday, the 8th of September, 1794, and at the house of John Rogers at Ballstown in said county on Monday, the 5th day of October, 1795

The above board of officers report in favor of Major (Aaron) Comstock as being entitled to the first majority in the regiment commanded by Lieutenant Colonel (John) Vandenburg—The Council approve of the same.

The Council find that William Waldron is entered as resigned in their minutes—Lib. C, page 20.

RESOLVED, that his Excellency the Commander-in-chief be, and he is hereby requested to convene the said board without delay to report the facts respecting the pretensions of James Dunning, John Doney, Uriah Gregory, Asher Cook, William W. Teller and William Clerk and also their opinion thereon.

The Council approves the opinion of the board that Major (John) Wood is entitled to rank before (Captain) Jesse Toll.

The Council also approves the opinion of the said board that Ezra Buel's claim is inadmissible.

The Council do not concur in opinion with the said board that Solomon Campbell is injured by the appointment of Deliverance Andrews as captain, inasmuch as they cannot learn that quartermasters commonly rise in their respective beats.

It appears by the index to the aforesaid minutes that Hezekiah Dunham has resigned.

The Council do not agree to the removal of Major Scovel upon the principles suggested in the report aforesaid.

The Council do not perceive any sufficient reason for removing Lieutenant Colonel Rogers, and consider the claims of Daniel Morgan and Killian Winne as unfounded.

Whereas the Council in their session in March, 1794, in order to terminate the disputes and discontents which then existed and still continue in the brigade commanded by Brigadier General (David) McCarty by reason of his having been appointed to that office, did agree to a resolution contained in a paper filed among the papers of the Council, but which was inadvertently omitted to be entered by their clerk in the book of their proceedings, which resolution is in words following vizt:

“ That a court be instituted to enquire what rank David McCarty, esquire, held in the late army of the United States or in the troops raised for the defence of this State or in the militia thereof, previous to his appointment of brigadier general specifying the dates

“ of his several commissions, and whether he at any time resigned “ any and what commission and when, that his Excellency be “ pleased to direct that such court report with all convenient speed
“ to the end that this Council at its next meeting may do what is “ right and just in the premises.”

And whereas the late Commander-in-chief, by his instructions to the adjutant general, dated the 21st day of April, 1794, did instruct and authorize him “ to appoint a board of officers in all cases where “ controversy existed, and did particularly instruct him to report
“ the facts with impartiality relative to the dispute which existed in “ General McCarty’s brigade.” And, whereas divers circumstances have occurred to prevent the execution of the said instructions and orders respecting the said dispute. And, whereas, Colonel Philip Conine, who conceives himself to be aggrieved and injured by the said appointment, is solicitous that his pretensions be considered and decided upon agreeable to his former representation and it appearing to the Council highly expedient that the dissention which prevails in the said brigade should without further delay be terminated;

THEREFORE, RESOLVED, that the Council do respectfully request the Commander-in-chief to cause the above resolution of the Council and the instructions of the former Commander-in-chief to be executed without further delay.

His Excellency the Commander-in-chief having on the recommendation of the adjutant general thought proper to form a troop of horse in that part of General (Abraham) Oothoudt’s brigade of militia in the county of Albany comprizing the regiments commanded by Colonels (John) Myndertse, (Johannes) Dietz, and (Jacob) Hockstrasser—therefore, Resolved, that the following officers be and they are hereby appointed for the said troop:

The Council proceeded to take into consideration the remonstrance of a number of officers in the regiment lately commanded by Lieutenant Colonel (Samuel) Shaw, in the county of Rensselaer, against Thomas Palmer, the present lieutenant colonel commandant of the same, and having heard and considered the facts and reasons on which the said remonstrance is founded, are of opinion that there is reason to apprehend that the said Thomas Palmer ought not to continue in that office; RESOLVED, that the further consideration of this subject be postponed until the twenty-ninth day of September next, and that his Excellency the Commander-in-chief be requested to suspend the said Thomas Palmer from the command of the said regiment in the meantime: ORDERED, that a copy of this resolution and of the said remonstrance be transmitted by the adjutant general to the said Thomas Palmer to the end that he may have an opportunity of then appearing before the Council or of making to them any communications that he may think proper.

April
7.

The nineteenth session of the legislature began in the city of New York, January 6, 1796. General William North was reelected speaker of the Assembly. The Council of Appointment chosen were Joshua Sands of Kings, Ebenezer Russell of Washington, and Michael Myers of Herkimer, all Federalists; and Abraham Schenck of Dutchess, Republican.

The first clash between the Governor and the Council of Appointment over the exclusive and conclusive authority of making appointments, the Governor or the Council, had occurred in October, 1793. The Federalists favored the appointment of Egbert Benson to the Supreme Court bench as an additional or fifth judge. Governor Clinton himself was opposed to the Republican candidate, Peter W. Yates, and naturally was supported by a large proportion of his party. The Governor manifested reluctance in his refusal to nominate Judge Yates, because of the factional quarrel that such a course might engender. He diplomatically protected himself, by questioning the advisability of adding one more judge to the Supreme Court bench. Two of the members of the Council of Appointment, Messrs. Frey and Hasbrouck, agreed with the Governor on this proposition; their colleagues, Messrs. Gelston and Woodworth, differed with them, but were unable to decide upon a candidate. It was here that the Council and the Governor established their first conflict. The members claimed the concurrent right with the Governor in the nomination of all officers and endeavored to exercise that right. Further consideration of the subject was deferred until the following Monday. The deadlock still continued, and Governor Clinton adjourned the proceedings from the government house in New York to the city hall in Albany, the first Tuesday in January, 1794. Resenting the course of the Council in their failure to elevate Egbert Benson to the new judgeship, the Federalists, who were largely in the majority in both branches of the legislature, began a violent attack upon the Governor and Council, through Josiah Ogden Hoffman, as soon as Governor Clinton and the Senate left the Assembly chamber at the opening of the session in January, 1794. Mr. Hoffman condemned the Council in unsparing terms, and made a motion that the House proceed at once to the election of a new Council. Several members protested against such a course on the ground that the old Council had not served a year, and that the appointment of a new one at this time might lead to all sorts of complications. Mr. Hoffman's proposition prevailed however, and the House accordingly elected Philip Schuyler, Zina Hitchcock, Selah Strong, Federalists, and Reuben Hopkins, Republican. The new council assembled in the Senate chamber, Albany on Wednesday, January 29, 1794, and, fulfilling the purpose for which they were chosen, appointed Egbert Benson a judge of the Supreme Court. Governor Clinton protested in vain against this proceeding, insisting that under the constitution the exclusive right of appointment was vested in the Governor.

With this undecided problem in mind, Governor Jay in his first address to the legislature in 1796, requested the passage of a declaratory law fixing the proper construction of the constitution in the matter of the exclusive power of appointment. Although both branches of the legislature returned respectful addresses to the Governor's speech, a significant silence was maintained on this proposition. Since the Benson episode the attitude of both parties had become reversed. So long as the Governor represented the Republicans and a majority of the Council of Appointment, the Federalists, it was to the interest of the Republicans, from the patronage standpoint, to demand that the sole authority was lodged not in the Council but in the Governor, as it was for the Federalists to claim that the Council, not the Governor, possessed equal power. But now the Governor, Jay, was a Federalist. The Federalists could not, therefore, without stultification demand power for the Governor of their party which they had denied to their Republican opponents, any more than the Republicans could attempt to deprive the Federalist Governor of authority which they maintained had belonged to the representative of their party, when they exercised executive control.

Under the enumeration of 1795 submitted to Secretary of State, Lewis Allaire Scott, January 20, 1796, the freeholders of the State numbered 36,338, and the voters, including those entitled to vote for members of Assembly, 66,017. Under the provisions of the first constitution, when the number of electors in any one district should increase to an amount equal to one twenty-fourth of the whole number in the State, as then existing, an additional Senator should be chosen by such district, and the number of Senators might be increased until the total number of Senators numbered one hundred. Twenty additional Senators were therefore to be elected—increasing the total number of Senators to forty-four—seventeen of whom were assigned to the western district. For equalization purposes, Albany and Saratoga, by legislative enactment, were transferred to the eastern district.

NEW YORK COUNTY.

Lieutenant Colonel John Van Dyck of the fifth regiment of the city and county of New York having (irregularly) resigned, his resignation is accepted.

1796.
September 30.

Whereas on the 11th of April last Solomon Saltus, junior, was by mistake appointed an ensign in the fifth regiment of militia in the city and county of New York, whereof John Van Dyck was lieutenant colonel commandant, Francis Saltus, junior, having been the person intended; THEREFORE, Resolved, that the said Francis Saltus, junior, be and he is hereby appointed an ensign in the said fifth regiment instead of Solomon Saltus, and that a commission issue to him accordingly.

The legislature which had convened in the city of New York November 1, 1796, for the purpose of choosing presidential electors, adjourned on the 11th, to meet in Albany January 3, 1797. Gulian Verplanck was elected Speaker of the Assembly. The new Council of Appointment was selected early in the month: Andrew Onderdonk of Queens, Ambrose Spencer of Columbia, Leonard Gansevoort of Albany, and Thomas Morris of Ontario—all Federalists.

The legislature this session passed two important measures—one to establish the capital of the State at Albany, the other creating the office of State Comptroller, abolishing the office of Auditor, which had in 1782 supplanted the office of Auditor-general, established by the Provincial Convention in 1776.

ALBANY COUNTY.

WHEREAS on the seventh day of December, 1795, Benjamin Brockway was appointed thro' mistake adjutant of the regiment of militia in the county of Albany, whereof Anthony Abeel is lieutenant colonel commandant—Beman Brockway, being the person intended 1797.

February
28.

to be appointed; therefore, RESOLVED, that the commission issued, in pursuance of said appointment be, and it is hereby declared to be void, and that the said Beman Brockway be and he is hereby appointed adjutant of the said regiment, to take rank from the date of the commission aforesaid.

1797.
March
2.

The Council proceeded to take into further consideration the remonstrance and complaint of sundry officers in the regiment commanded by Lieutenant Colonel (Thomas) Palmer in the county of Rensselaer against the said lieutenant colonel, and thereupon Resolved, that his Excellency the Commander-in-chief be requested to countermand the order by which (at the desire of the Council in April last) the said lieutenant colonel was suspended from the command of the said regiment.

1797.
2.

Resolved, that the resignation (irregularly made) of Thomas Palmer, lieutenant colonel commandant of a regiment of militia in the county of Rensselaer be referred to the major general (Robert Van Rensselaer) of the (eastern) division (to which he belongs) for his opinion thereon.

WASHINGTON COUNTY.

14.

WHEREAS it appears to the Council, as well from the representation of Lieutenant Colonel Garret Lansing of the county of Washington, as from that of the adjutant general who was present, that David Becker, an ensign and also appointed a lieutenant in Captain Nathaniel Gage's company of light infantry under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Lansing, being ordered by the said lieutenant colonel at the last parade of Lieutenant Colonel Lansing's regiment, to dismiss certain of the privates of the said company, who were not equipped according to law, to the battalion companies, did not only refuse to obey the said order, but did in contempt of the same march the men in a body to an adjoining tavern.

Resolved, that said David Decker be and he is hereby cashiered and his said commissions revoked.

And whereas, it appears from the representation of Lieutenant Colonel Lansing that he did by a written order direct the before mentioned Nathaniel Gage to parade his company on Monday, the sixth day of August, 1795. And whereas, it appears from a letter from the said Nathaniel Gage to the said lieutenant colonel that he had received the said order, and in the said letter declares his refusal to obey it; and it appearing further from the evidence of the said lieutenant colonel that the said Nathaniel Gage did not parade his company on the said sixth of August,

RESOLVED, that the said captain be and is hereby cashiered and his commission revoked.

The Legislature assembled at Albany, January 2, 1798. Dirck Ten Broeck, of Albany, Federalist, was elected speaker of the Assembly over William Denning, of New York, Republican. The Council of Appointment consisted of Ezra L'Hommedieu of Suffolk, Republican, and William Thompson of Orange, Moses Vail of Rensselaer, and Dr. Joseph White of Otsego, Federalists. This was an interesting year in State politics. After an exciting campaign John Jay had been reelected Governor by a flattering indorsing majority over his devoted friend of many years' standing, Chancellor Livingston. To fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Scott, Major Daniel Hale of Albany had been appointed Secretary of State by the Council of Appointment against the protest of Governor Jay, who had successively nominated several persons who were as successively rejected by the Council. Robert M'Clallen of Albany, who five years later was discovered to be a defaulter to the State to the amount of $33,000, was appointed State Treasurer.

By the expiration of the term of service of Chief Justice Robert Yates and the resignation of John Sloss Hobart from the Supreme Court bench, a very interesting series of judicial promotions began. John Lansing, junior, of Albany, was appointed Judge Yates' successor. James Kent, then recorder of the city of New York, made his first appearance on the Supreme Court bench, to succeed Judge Lansing. When Judge Lansing was promoted chancellor in 1801, he was succeeded for a time as chief justice by Morgan Lewis, who in turn was followed by James Kent. In 1814, when the age limit necessitated the retirement of Chancellor Lansing, the Council of Appointment elevated Chief Judge Kent to the vacancy created.

TEMPORARY CAPITOL AT ALBANY, 1797-1807.

This building had been used for many years as a court house and jail. It stood at the northeast corner of Broadway and Hudson street. Munsell tells us that criminals had been incarcerated, tried and executed within its walls, and that the whipping-post stood before it many years. From its steps the Declaration of Independence was read in 1776.

In view of the alarming possibilities of war with France, Governor Jay, shortly after his second term as governor had begun, called an extraordinary session of the legislature, which opened August 9, 1798, and lasted until August 27th. National subjects only were considered by the governor in his address and by the legislature in their deliberations. Necessary legislation was enacted for the protection of the State. The regular session of the legislature began January 2, 1799. The Council of Appointment selected were: William Denning of New York, Republican; and Ebenezer Foote of Rensselaer, Ebenezer Clark of Ulster, and John Frey of Montgomery, Federalists. The Republicans undertook by legislative enactment to change the mode of selecting presidential electors by transferring the power from the legislature to the people direct, the State to be divided into districts with that object in view. The bill passed the Assembly, where the Republicans predominated, but was rejected in the Senate, which was controlled by the Federalists, who regarded the measure purely as a political expedient to enable the Republicans to obtain a part of the electoral college in the presidential election of 1800. A rider which abolished the great senatorial districts and provided for the election of Senators from separate districts, after the system now (1901) followed, died with the original bill.

In the same manner the celebrated Virginia and Kentucky resolutions, drawn by James Madison, as a protest against the alien and sedition laws and other unpopular concomitants of President Adams' administration, were disposed of. The Republican Assembly adopted and the Federal Senate repudiated these resolutions. Another act which has made this session of the legislature a memorable one, was that for "supplying the city of New York with pure and wholesome water." Colonel Aaron Burr was the progenitor of this scheme; drafted the bill and personally was responsible for its passage through the legislature. Under this innocent caption the legislature chartered the Manhattan Bank of New York, a fact not generally known until after the governor signed the bill.

This demonstration of political charlatanry produced an effect on the election for members of the legislature of 1800 disastrous to the party and to the men who engineered the scheme. The secret became known shortly before the election, and Colonel Burr, who had been selected to lead the Republican ticket in New York—where his party had been uniformly successful for the two preceding years—went down in the general ruin. Charges were made in pamphlets and the newspapers of the day, in effect that a large number of the members of the legislature had been deceived into voting for the bank bill under the delusion that it only proposed to insure New York city with a much needed water supply; while partisans hoped that the new corporation, with its vast influence, could be utilized by Colonel Burr as a powerful political machine to assist friends and to injure opponents. After the spring election of 1799—when the legislature was chosen for the year 1800—the Federalists neutralized a great deal of the effect of their victory by rigorous prosecutions of Republicans for alleged violations of the alien and sedition laws.

It was under circumstances of this kind, with the shadow of the death of Washington hanging over it, that the legislature started the session of 1800 on January 28th. Dirck Ten Broeck was re-elected Speaker. February 5th the new Council of Appointment was chosen: Samuel Haight of Westchester, Robert Sands of Washington, James Gordon of Saratoga, and Thomas R. Gold of Oneida, all Federalists.

April 8th the legislature adjourned to the first Tuesday in November. The result of the election in April, however, discomfited the Federalists, who had carried the legislature so triumphantly the year before. The Republicans were surprisingly successful, and their victory in the State and nation practically insured the election of Thomas Jefferson as President the following year. The term of the legislature then in existence would expire June 30th. The Federalists were in the majority. If the legislature could be convened in extraordinary session, and a bill passed to divide the State into districts for the election of presidential electors by the people, the Federalists were reasonably certain of electing four of their representatives, thus allowing the Republicans but eight votes instead of twelve, which the latter would inevitably secure were the matter left to the legislature. On the face of the returns after the April election in 1800 Jefferson could safely rely upon 73 votes, including the twelve votes from New York, if chosen by the legislature, while seventy votes only were necessary to a choice in the electoral college. But if a special session of the existing legislature were called and the expedient as proposed were adopted, Jefferson could control only sixty-nine votes, and his election would be defeated. Alexander Hamilton was the one man in the State capable of inspiring such a plot and the one Federalist with audacity enough to manipulate it. Accordingly, after a conference with a number of his partisan friends, he addressed a letter to Governor Jay urging him to call the legislature together before the expiration of his term, to convert his scheme into a law of the State. Governor Jay declined to lend the power of his office to the conspirators. He wrote this indorsement on the back of Hamilton's letter: "Proposing a measure for party purposes, which I think it would not become me to adopt."

The new legislature assembled November 4, 1800. In the Assembly Samuel Osgood, of New York, a Republican, was chosen Speaker. The Senate elected Federalist and the Assembly Republican electors. On joint ballot, however, the Republicans named the twelve electors by twenty-two majority. The day before adjournment, on November 7th, a Republican offered a resolution for the election of a new Council of Appointment. The Federalists opposed the motion and used the Republican argument of 1794, when the Federalists, then in majority, curtailed the time limit of the then Republican council, in effect that the existing Council had not held office for a year. The resolution, however, was adopted and the new Council was thereupon chosen: DeWitt Clinton of Queens, Ambrose Spencer of Columbia, Robert Roseboom of Otsego, and John Sanders of Schenectady; the latter was the only Federalist of the four.

CAYUGA COUNTY.

His Excellency the Commander-in-chief, on the recommendation of Brigadier General Benjamin Ledyard, having thought it proper to form a new regiment in the county of Cayuga to be taken from such parts of the regiments now commanded by Lieutenant Colonels (John L.) Hardenbergh and (John) Tillotson, as lie westerly of the Cayuga lake and the Seneca river; therefore, Resolved, that in the said regiment the following officers be and they are hereby appointed:

Wilhelmus Mynderse, lieutenant colonel commandant;

Benjamin Dey, first major; William Hemrod, second major; James Van Horne, adjutant; Andrew McKnights, quartermaster; Phineas Tuttle, paymaster.

CAVALRY—His Excellency the Commander-in-chief, on the recommendation of Brigadier General Ledyard, having thought it proper to form a troop of horse in the northern and another in the southern part of the county of Cayuga in the second squadron of cavalry in the fifth division of the militia of this State, RESOLVED, that Israel Smith be and he is hereby appointed captain of the northern troop and Jonathan Brownell captain of the southern troop.

ONONDAGA COUNTY CAVALRY.

Coleman J. Keeler, captain of a troop in the county of Onondaga in the second squadron of cavalry in the fifth division of the militia of this State, vice Thaddeus M. Wood, superseded.

WHEREAS David Van Horne, the adjutant general, has by a paralytic complaint been rendered incapable of attending to the duties of that office, and it is very uncertain, in case he should recover, whether his health will hereafter be such as to enable him to execute the same; AND WHEREAS on the one hand the affairs of the militia department require the unremitting attention of the adjutant general and on the other motives of delicacy and humanity oppose the superseding of an officer under such afflicting circumstances; AND Whereas, it is desirable as far as possible to reconcile the public interests with a due regard to this office; therefore, RESOLVED, that Solomon Van Rensselaer, esquire, be and is hereby appointed adjutant general of this State in the place of David Van Horne, who is hereby removed from the said office. But it is expressly declared and understood that in case the said David Van Horne should hereafter become capable of executing the active duties of the said office, that then he ought to be reappointed and the said Solomon Van Rensselaer cease any longer to hold it.

SARATOGA COUNTY.

* Subjoined will be found a report from the original records of this dispute between Governor Jay and the Council:

“At a meeting of the Council of Appointment held at the City Hall of the City of Albany on Wednesday the 11th of February, 1801; Present His Excellency John Jay, Esquire, President, the Honorable Robert Roseboom, John Sanders, Ambrose Spencer, Dewitt Clinton, Esquires, Members.

* * * His Excellency the Governor having nominated Jesse Thompson, for the office of sheriff of the County of Dutchess, the Council, excepting Mr. Sanders, did not consent to his appointment.

His Excellency proceeded to nominate John B. Van Wyck * * Samuel Clift * * William Emott * * Aaron Stockholme * * Isaac Smith * * Henry Livingston of Poughkeepsie * * (and) Samuel Augustus Barker for the said office; the Council, excepting Mr. Sanders, did not consent to his (their) appointment (s)”
* * * *

(Signed, same as at end.)

Meeting held at same place, “Tuesday the 24th February 1801.”

“Present” (same as before).

“His Excellency the Governor proposed that the Secretary be directed to enter on the minutes of their proceedings all nominations to office agreeably to the directions of Senator Sanders on one side and the three Republican members on the other. The majority at this meeting tied the Governor's hand on a political appointment and rejected several names he put in nomination. A week later the Council nominated a Republican as sheriff of Dutchess county, thus defeating the intention of the Governor, who had favored a member of his own party. The culminating point, however, was reached February 24th. The Governor had nominated and the Council had rejected Benjamin Jackson as sheriff of Orange county. Several other nominations that he made met the same fate. De Witt Clinton thereupon moved the nomination of John Blake, junior, of Orange county. Ignoring this motion, the Governor named John Nicholson. The Republican members refused to vote. The question of difference was then formulated; the Governor maintained exclusive authority to nominate; the Council demanded co-ordinate power; the Governor as president of the the 8th section of the act entitled 'An act to organize the Government of this State,' passed the 16th March 1778. The question being put was carried in the negative with the exception of Mr. Sanders, who agreed to the same, but the other members of the Council dissented, because from the first organization of the Government until the meeting of the present Council the entries in the minutes of the Council have as they believe invariably been otherwise, and because the Council do not admit, but deny that the right of nomination exists in the Governor exclusively, which his Excellency claims and insists upon.

"Because such a procedure can have no other tendency than unnecessarily to swell the minutes of the Council, and

"Because in the opinion of the Council the Statute referred to by his Excellency, the Governor, does not direct the entry of nominations, whether made by the Governor or any other member of the Council, but applies only to such cases where appointments are consequent upon nominations."

"* * * Mr. Clinton having nominated John Blake, Jun'r, for the office of Sheriff of the County of Orange, and His Excellency the Governor claiming the exclusive right of nomination, observed, that it would be proper for him to consider what ought to be his conduct relative thereto and at the same time requested that an entry thereof should be made on the minutes with a declaration that nothing should be intended thereby to controvene the resolution of the Council adopted previously at this meeting.

"The Council thereupon adjourned."

(Signed) John Jay, Robert Roseboom, John Sanders, Ambrose Spencer, DeWitt Clinton.

Council refused to put any motion made by a member, and the members declined to vote on any nomination made by the Governor. The Governor thereupon adjourned the Council pending the time when he would determine the course he proposed to pursue. Nor did he ever convene the Council again.

February 26th, Governor Jay submitted a message to the legislature in which he gave a history of the dispute between the Council of Appointment and the Governor:

“It has generally and justly been considered,” he wrote, “as highly important to the Security and Duration of free states, that the different Departments and Officers of Government should exercise those Powers only, which are constitutionally vested in them; and that all controversies between them respecting the Limits of their respective Jurisdictions and Authorities, be circumspectly and speedily settled. There are few Constitutions or other Instruments, however carefully framed, which are entirely free from ambiguity, and do not contain Paragraphs liable to different constructions. Defects and obscurities have been observed in the Constitution of this State, and on certain occasions they have produced inconveniences.

“The 23d article of it ordains, ‘that all officers, other than those who by this Constitution are directed to be otherwise appointed, shall be appointed in the manner following, to wit: The Assembly shall, once in every year, openly nominate and appoint one of the Senators from each Great District, which Senators shall form a Council for the appointment of the said officers, of which the Governor for the time being, or the Lieutenant Governor, or President of the Senate, when they shall respectively administer the Government, shall be president, and have a casting Voice, but no other Vote, and with the advice and consent of the said Council, shall appoint all the said officers.’

“Doubts have long existed whether by this article the right of nomination was exclusively vested in the Governor, or whether it was vested concurrently in him and the Council. Questions arose on this article during the administration of my predecessor, and in the month of March, 1794, gave occasion to animated discussions between him and the then Council.

“ When I came to the Government my official duty made it proper for me to form as correct a judgment on the subject as I possibly could. After having deliberately considered this article, I became fixed in the opinion, that it vested the right of nomination exclusively in the Governor, and for this, among other reasons, that the right to appoint, necessarily included the right to select and nominate; and it gave me pleasure to find, on conferring with my predecessor, that this opinion was strengthened by his informing me that he had always claimed this right, and never yielded or conceded it to be in the Council.

“ Nevertheless, as respectable members of a former Council, acting under their oaths to support the Constitution, had adopted a different construction of this article, and had actually assumed and exercised this right, it was evident that this was a question on which upright and judicious men might differ in opinion. Being therefore apprehensive that it might, and probably would again produce disagreeable disputes, I thought it advisable to insert the following paragraph in the first speech which I had the honor to make to both houses of the legislature, viz.

“ There is an article in the constitution, which, by admitting of two different constructions, has given rise to opposite opinions; and may give occasion to disagreeable contests and embarrassments. The article I allude to, is the one which ordains that the person administering the Government for the time being, shall be President of the Council of Appointment, and have a casting voice, but no other vote, and with the advice and consent of the said council, shall appoint all the officers which the constitution directs to be appointed. Whether this does, by just construction, assign to him the exclusive right of nomination, is a question, which though not of recent date, still remains to be definitively settled. Circumstanced as I am, in relation to this question, I think it proper merely to state it; and to submit to your consideration the expediency of determining it by a declaratory act.’

“Unfortunately this important question was permitted to continue undecided; and, consequently, I could adopt no other rule for my official conduct, than that construction of the article which appeared to me to be the best founded; and which had been adopted as the true construction by my predecessor. I have therefore uniformly held and exercised the exclusive right of nomination; nor have any of the several councils endeavored to assume it, until the 24th day of this month, when the following occurrences took place, viz.

“The present sheriffs of New York and Queens, who had been nominated on the 11th instant were negatived. Benjamin Jackson, who on the 17th instant was nominated for sheriff of Orange, was negatived. Certain other nominations were agreed to. Three persons were then successively nominated for the office of sheriff of Schoharie, to wit, Wardell Green, John Ingold and Benjamin Miles, and they were negatived. Col. William Falconer was then nominated for sheriff of Orange, and being negatived, I nominated Col. John Nicholson for that office. On this nomination the Council (except Mr. Sanders) explicitly refused to vote; and one of the members of the Council proceeded to nominate John Blake, junior, for sheriff of that county. Judging it prudent to consider maturely what ought to be my conduct under such circumstances, the Council was adjourned.

“After having well considered the subject, it appears to me proper to state these facts to you. While I think and believe, as I most sincerely do, that the right to nominate is vested exclusively in the Governor by the constitution, it ought not, and I am persuaded it will not, be expected that I should, by conceding this right or power to any member of the Council, violate my oath to administer the government to the best of my knowledge, in conformity with the powers delegated to me by the constitution.

“From what had formerly happened it was not a matter of surprise to me that the Council should claim a concurrent right of nomination with me; but the refusal to vote on one of my nominations, and while it remained undecided to nominate another person for the same office, were measures which, going to the exclusion of even a concurrent right in the Governor, appeared to me not a little extraordinary.

“Many appointments exceedingly interesting to the public ought soon to be made; but while those gentlemen persist in the course of proceeding which they have adopted, that business must necessarily remain subjected to impediments not in my power to obviate or remove. I therefore submit to your consideration whether it has not become indispensable, that the merits of these opposite and interfering claims to the right of nomination should be ascertained and decided without delay.

“In whatever constitutional way, whether by a declaratory statute or by judgment of law, a decision may be made; and whether it should or should not correspond with the opinion I have expressed, I shall certainly acquiesce in and regulate my conduct by it.”

Having ordered 150 copies of the message to be printed for the use of the members of the House, the discussion of the matter was postponed until the following day, when it was resolved, “That the legislature had no authority to interpose between the executive and the members of the Council of Appointment, touching the right of nomination, or to pass a declaratory act defining the powers of the said Council or prescribing the manner in which the same shall be exercised.”

The Governor went further. He requested the opinion of the chancellor and the judges of the Supreme Court and again was disappointed, for the judges unanimously refused, because the matter was not within the scope of their official duties but entirely extra-judicial.

On March 17th the three Republican members of the Council, Messrs. Spencer, DeWitt Clinton and Roseboom, sent their version of the dispute to the Assembly. It was conspicuous for the spirit of hostility displayed toward Governor Jay. The members insisted upon their right to nominate with the Governor. One result of the dispute, however, was the constitutional convention of 1801.

Governor Jay in his opening address to the legislature had laid particular stress upon the point of difference between the Governor and the Council and the unwieldy proportions the legislature, and especially the Senate, was attaining, owing to the imperfect provisions of the first constitution. But the greatest oversight of that instrument lay in its failure to provide for amendments to the existing constitution or arrangements for holding a constitutional convention. The legislature, therefore, found itself in an embarrassing situation. It possessed no authority to frame laws, either to amend the old or make a new constitution. It solved the problem, however, by passing "an act" recommending a convention because certain articles of the constitution are of doubtful construction or have been found inconvenient in practice. The election for delegates was to begin on the last Tuesday of August and to continue for three days. The delegates so chosen were to meet at the court house in Albany on the second Tuesday of October to consider "the parts of the Constitution of this State respecting the number of Senators and Members of Assembly in this State, and with power to reduce and limit the number of them as the said convention may deem proper; and also for the purpose of considering and determining the true construction of the twenty-third article of the Constitution of this State relative to the right of nomination to office, but with no other power or authority whatsoever."

Early in the preceding November John Jay had firmly declined a renomination for a third term. The Federalists consequently nominated Stephen Van Rensselaer for Governor and James Watson for Lieutenant Governor. The Republicans persuaded Governor Clinton to leave his retirement as their standard bearer, and in April, 1801, he was elected by nearly four thousand majority. As Governor Jay had refused to call a meeting of the Council after February 24th, and as his term of office expired July 1st, it was not until August 8th that Governor Clinton brought the members together. The appointments which Governor Jay refused to countenance in February were sanctioned in August. This Council of Appointment soon established a record which for summary removals and arbitrary exercise of power had not been equalled. At its first meeting the Secretary of State and State Comptroller were incontinently removed from office purely for partisan reasons. A resident of Ulster was appointed surrogate of New York county because of his friendship for DeWitt Clinton, one of the members. A master in chancery and a judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Cayuga were relegated to private life because they were not politically in accord with the men who controlled the Council. This arbitrary course produced a protest from Governor Clinton that was entered on the Council's minutes. In several other instances the Governor refused to sign the minutes of the Council's proceedings. The guillotining process was continued at the next meeting of the Council, especially of New York county office holders; the district attorney, the recorder, clerk of the city and clerk of the circuit all made way for faithful Republicans; the district attorneys of the second and seventh districts suffered a similar fate. Subsequent sessions of this same Council were marked by removals as general, uncalled for and unnecessary. Its interference with the judiciary, however, produced more disquiet in the public mind than all of its other idiosyncrasies. Under the constitutional requirements that new commissions should be issued to judges of the county courts other than the first judge and to justices of the peace once at least in three years," new commissions were now presented to most of the counties of the State, in which the name of a Republican judge was invariably substituted for that of the Federal incumbent. In this manner the Republican party organized a vast and an unscrupulous political machine, extending in its ramifications from the Capitol at Albany to the remotest hamlets in the State.

The constitutional convention executed its work within a brief period. It assembled October 13, 1801, elected Vice President Aaron Burr its president, and adjourned after two weeks' deliberation. Regarding the legislative proposition: the number of Senators was fixed at 32, of Members of Assembly at 100, to be increased after each census, at the rate of two yearly until the number 150 was reached. As for the dispute over the right to control the patronage, DeWitt Clinton, the Governor's nephew, and Ambrose Spencer were prominent as the champions of the rights of the Council of Appointment, and John V. Henry, a successful lawyer of Albany, a member of Assembly who had been removed from the office of State Comptroller in August by Messrs. Clinton and Spencer, as the champion of the prerogatives of the Governor. The convention, however, decided that the Council and the Governor were vested with equal powers in the matter of appointments—or as Daniel D. Tompkins, a delegate to the convention of 1801, expressed it, when president of the constitutional convention of 1821: "The convention of 1801 was assembled to sanction a violent construction of the constitution. Then the maxim was to strip the Governor of as much power as possible." Mr. Tompkins was one of the fourteen delegates who voted to sustain John Jay's interpretation of the section of the constitution in dispute.

CHENANGO COUNTY.

WHEREAS Lieutenant Colonel (John) Lincklaen and Lieutenant Colonel (Samuel) Clemens, commandants of two regiments of militia in the county of Chenango, whereof Jonathan Forman is brigadier general, together with Samuel S. Forman and James Green, majors in the said Colonel Lincklaen's regiment, and Samuel Sincler and Joseph Dixon, majors in the regiment commanded by the said Colonel Clemens and several commissioned officers belonging to the said regiments have, through Michael Myers, esquire, major general of the fifth division of the militia of this State, transmitted to his Excellency the Governor their resignations of the offices by them held in the militia, without the said major general's expressing any opinion thereon; and the reasons assigned by Lieutenant Colonel Clemens and several of the officers of his regiment, literally alike with those assigned by Lieutenant Colonel Lincklaen and several of the officers of his regiment, they, therefore, involve the same consideration, and it appears to the Council manifest, that the said Lieutenant Colonel Lincklaen and Lieutenant Colonel Clemens, with such of their respective officers as have signed the said resignations, have availed themselves of the permission given them by law of assigning their reasons for their resignations, not only to animadvert on the proceedings of his Excellency the Governor on disaffirming the sentence of a court martial held on the conduct of Lieutenant Colonel Benjamin Hovey, but also to censure and condemn the conduct of the late Council of Appointment in the removal of Brigadier General (Jonathan) Forman, which procedure, on the part of the said lieutenant colonels and their said officers, this Council conceive not only to be highly indecorous and reprehensible, but evidential of a spirit of combination calculated to subvert the established discipline of the militia and to produce amongst them insubordination. Therefore, Resolved (Mr. (Lemuel) Chipman, dissenting), that the said resignations so made as aforesaid be not accepted; but inasmuch as the said Lieutenant Colonel Lincklaen and Lieutenant Colonel Samuel Clemens and their said majors appear to the Council unworthy to hold any longer their said offices, it is further Resolved, that the said John Lincklaen and Samuel Clemens, lieutenant colonels, and Samuel S. Forman and James Green, the said majors in the said regiment commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Lincklaen, and Samuel Sincler and Joseph Dixon, the said majors in the said regiment commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Clemens, be and they are hereby suspended from holding the said offices respectively, and that supersedeas issue accordingly; and RESOLVED, further, that the further consideration of the resignations of the aforesaid captains and subaltern officers, who may have been unduly influenced by their superior officers, be postponed until the next meeting of the Council.

WASHINGTON COUNTY.

January

His Excellency the Governor laid before the Council the several papers following, viz.:

1. An official report and representation of Anthony J. Blanchard, brigade inspector of the brigade of militia in the county of Washington, made to Henry K. Van Rensselaer, brigadier general of the militia of the county of Rensselaer and commandant of the third division of the militia of this State, dated October 11, 1802, respecting the conduct of David Thomas, lieutenant colonel commandant and commandant of the brigade of militia of the said county of Washington, at the last annual brigade inspection.

2. A report and representation of Captain Daniel Mason of the said brigade made as aforesaid on the same subject.

3. A representation of sundry of the officers in the said brigade addressed to the honorable the Council of Appointment, dated the 30th November, 1802, on the same subject.

4. An order of the said Lieutenant Colonel David Thomas, as commandant of the brigade aforesaid, approving of the sentence of a court martial ordered by him for the trial of the said Captain Mason, dated October 28th, 1802.

5. A certificate of Adjutant David Corswell, certifying his having received the said order on the 2d day of November, 1802, and of his having served the same on Captain Mason on the same day.

6. An affidavit of Adjutant Daniel Shepherd and Captain Caleb Brown, two of the members of the court martial held as aforesaid for the trial of Captain Mason, stating their decision in the said trial to have been made on the 13th day of October, 1802.

7. A letter from General Henry K. Van Rensselaer, addressed to his Excellency the Governor and the honorable the Council of Appointment, enclosing the representations and reports of the said Anthony J. Blanchard and Captain Mason, with his opinion thereon.

And the same being read and considered.

RESOLVED, that in the opinion of the Council they do not contain any charge against the said David Thomas, as colonel commandant of the brigade of militia in the county of Washington, which would justify his arrest, except that of not having approved the sentence of a court martial held by his order for the trial of Captain Daniel Mason; and that in this instance it appears from the papers before the Council that the sentence of said court was pronounced on the 13th day of October last and approved by the said David Thomas, as lieutenant colonel commandant of the said brigade in general orders dated the 28th of that month.

AND WHEREAS the said David Thomas was on the second day of April last appointed, by this Council, brigadier general of the said brigade of militia in the room of John Williams, superseded and removed from that office, but owing to some accident the said appointment was not entered on the minutes of the Council; therefore,

RESOLVED, that the said David Thomas be and he is hereby appointed brigadier general of the brigade of militia of the county of Washington, to take rank as such from the said second day of April last.

The legislature met at Albany January 24, 1803. Mr. Storm was honored with reelection as Speaker. The new Council chosen consisted of Ebenezer Purdy of Westchester, John C. Hogeboom of Columbia, Jacobus Van Schoonhoven of Saratoga, and Jacob Snell of Montgomery. Mr. Van Schoonhoven was the only Federalist, the others were elected as Republicans.

It was during this session of the legislature that the discovery of State Treasurer M'Clallen's defalcation was made. The amount involved was $33,000. A charter was given this year to the New York State bank, for the anomalous reason that as the three existing banks in the State outside of New York—the Farmers' Bank at Lansingburgh, the Bank of Albany at Albany, and the Bank of Columbia at Hudson—were all controlled by Federalists, the petitioners for the new bank demanded consideration on purely partisan grounds.

RESOLVED, that Abraham Allen be no longer surgeon of the regiment of militia in the county of Washington, lately commanded by David Thomas, lieutenant colonel commandant thereof, and that a supersedeas issue accordingly; Selah Brown, surgeon, vice Abraham Allen, removed.

February
23.

WHEREAS Lemuel Kingsbury, captain of a company of cavalry in the town of Cazenovia, in the county of Chenango, and Ebenezer Lyon, lieutenant of the same company, have, through Stephen Van Rensselaer, esquire, major general of the division of cavalry of this State, transmitted to his Excellency the Governor their resignations of the offices so by them respectively held in the militia; AND WHEREAS, the said Stephen Van Rensselaer, by his letter dated the 16th of September, 1802, transmitting the said resignations, has expressed his opinion thereon, that it would be proper that the same should be accepted, although by an act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'Act act to organize the militia of this State,'" passed April 5, 1802, it is enacted that all resignations hereafter to be made should be approved of by the commandants of regiments, and the brigadier general of the regiment or brigade to which the officer resigning belongs: And it appearing to the Council manifest that the said Lemuel Kingsbury and Ebenezer Lyon have availed themselves of the permission given them by law of assigning their reasons for their resignations, not only to animadvert on the proceedings of his Excellency the Governor, on disaffirming the sentence of a court martial held for the trial of Lieutenant Colonel Benjamin Hovey, but also to censure and condemn the conduct of the Council of Appointment in the removal of Brigadier General (Jonathan) Forman; which procedure on the part of the said officers this Council conceive not only to be highly indecorous and reprehensible but evidential of a spirit of combination with Lieutenant Colonels (John) Lincklaen and (Samuel) Clemens, and other officers of their respective regiments; who have heretofore assigned similar reasons for their resignations, calculated to subvert the established discipline of the militia and to produce among them insubordination; therefore,

RESOLVED, that the resignations of the said Lemuel Kingsbury and Ebenezer Lyon be not accepted; but inasmuch as the said Lemuel Kingsbury and Ebenezer Lyon appear to the Council to be unworthy to hold any longer their said offices, it is further Resolved, that they be and hereby are superseded from holding the said offices, and that supersedeas issue accordingly.

And whereas the Council at their last meeting postponed the consideration of the resignations of Samuel Frizel, adjutant; Hendrick De Clercq, quartermaster; Peter Tyler, John G. Blackston, lieutenants; and Asa Pease, junior, Thomas R. Tracy, Meletiah Hatch, and Windsor Coman, ensigns, in the regiment in said county whereof Samuel Clemens was lately lieutenant colonel commandant: AND WHEREAS none of the aforesaid officers have availed themselves of the advantage allowed them by the indulgence of the Council of acknowledging their misconduct and retracting their error except Nat. Collins, George Anderson, and Joseph Collins, three of the said captains; Alpheus Hall, one of the said lieutenants; and Thomas R. Tracy and Richard Button, two of the said ensigns, who have made satisfactory apologies to the Commander-in-chief; therefore,

RESOLVED, that the said Samuel Frizel, Hendrick De Clercq, James Moore, David Smith, Selathiel Jackson, Jedediah T. Turner, Peter Tyler, John G. Moyer, Joseph Yean, Ira Alvoard, Elisha Farnham, Elihu Severance, David Hutchinson, George Brown, John Viles, Benjamin Pier, Jacob Kennedy, Joseph Morse, Samuel White, William McClanather, Elihu Bosworth, Thaddeus Muzzy, Rufus Eldrid, Stephen F. The Republican party was triumphant in the state and nation at the April election in 1803. Accordingly that party organized the legislature in January, 1804. Alexander Sheldon of Montgomery was chosen Speaker. The Council of Appointment was selected by the Assembly February 16th: John Broome of New York, Abraham Adriance of Dutchess, Thomas Tredwell of Suffolk, and Caleb Hyde of Tioga, all Republicans.

Since the memorable struggle for the presidency in 1801, Aaron Burr had been discredited by a large element in his party, who accused him of intriguing to defeat the election of Thomas Jefferson and to elevate himself to the office of president. No effort was therefore made to renominate him for vice-president in 1804, and George Clinton, the most popular representative of his party in the East, became the logical candidate. Recent elections had demonstrated that dry-rot was destroying the Federalist party and that the Republican party had become firmly entrenched in popular estimation as the party of the people. The elimination of George Clinton from the field of State politics rather complicated the political situation when the time arrived to find a candidate of his party for governor. The Republican Members of Assembly, in caucus assembled, conferred the distinction of the gubernatorial nomination upon Chancellor John Lansing, with John Broome for lieutenant governor. The chancellor at first accepted, but subsequently declined the compliment. On the same day, February 18th, the friends of Colonel Burr assembled at the Tontine coffee house in Albany and formally put him in nomination for the office of governor. Two days later another delegation of his friends met in New York and took similar action. Subsequently a number of citizens of Albany ratified the nomination and supplemented it by the nomination of Oliver Phelps, a wealthy and influential land operator, for lieutenant governor.

In the meantime the Republican legislators held another caucus in Albany, at which Chief Justice Morgan Lewis received the nomination that had been declined by Chancellor Lansing. The address favoring Judge Lewis and Senator Broome was signed by one hundred and four of the one hundred and thirty-two members of the legislature, Senators and Members, thus indicating that the number who supported Colonel Burr must have been small.

The Federalists made no nomination, and therefore were driven to choose between the two Republican candidates. Toward Colonel Burr, the Hamilton wing of the party entertained feelings of the strongest resentment. Hamilton himself habitually alluded to Burr as an unsafe man and an unprincipled politician. Burr was defeated, receiving 22,139 votes against Judge Lewis' 30,829. The genesis of the fatal duel between Colonel Burr and Alexander Hamilton can be traced to the events immediately preceding this election. The election killed Burr politically, as the duel destroyed him socially and professionally.

Immediately upon assuming office Governor Lewis convened the Council of Appointment. Judge Kent was selected as chief justice to fill the vacancy made by the election of Judge Lewis as governor. Daniel D. Tompkins, at that time only thirty years of age, was elevated to the Supreme Court bench.

The legislature gathered in November to choose presidential electors. Alexander Sheldon was re-elected Speaker of the Assembly.

The legislature convened at Albany, January 28th, 1806. Dr. Sheldon was again elected Speaker. Immediately a struggle arose over the unprecedented course adopted in choosing the Council of Appointment. A snap caucus of the Republican members of Assembly was called to accommodate De Witt Clinton, whose political opponents were in the majority in his own district, and who would, therefore, have been defeated for member of the Council had the proceedings been held in the regular way. This caucus nominated DeWitt Clinton of Queens, Robert Johnston of Dutchess, Adam Comstock of Saratoga, and Henry Huntington of Oneida, all Republicans.

March 26th, the Council removed Thomas Tillotson from the office of Secretary of State and appointed Elisha Jenkins to the vacancy thus created; Maturin Livingston was removed from the office of Recorder of New York to make way for Pierre C. Van Wyck, a friend of DeWitt Clinton. The Governor and Mr. Huntington protested against these high-handed proceedings. Carrying out the policy to retire from active official life, the friends of Governor Lewis, in order to defeat his re-election, the majority of the Council proceeded to remove sheriffs, surrogates, county judges, county clerks and justices of the peace by the wholesale. Archibald McIntyre was appointed State Comptroller.

The Republican party was much divided this year, because of the contest between Governor Lewis and DeWitt Clinton. The Federalists, however, were in a hopeless minority. Andrew McCord of Orange, who was supported by the friends of Governor Lewis, was chosen Speaker of the Assembly over Dr. Sheldon, the Clinton candidate. On January 29, the day after the organization of the legislature, the Governor's friends by a coalition with the Federalists elected the Council of Appointment, namely: Thomas Thomas of Westchester, James Burt of Orange, Judge Edward Savage of Washington, and John Nicholas of Ontario. To balance accounts with the Clinton people for their arbitrary removals the year before, when they controlled the Council of Appointment, the new Council, at their first session, summarily removed DeWitt Clinton from the lucrative and influential office of mayor of New York. Judge Smith Thompson, of Albany, declined to take the position, which was then awarded to Colonel Marinus Willett. On February 16th the Council restored Maturin Livingston to the office of recorder of New York and Dr. Tillotson to that of Secretary of State.

The same evening sixty-five Republican members of the legislature nominated Daniel D. Tompkins of New York for Governor, and renominated John Broome for Lieutenant-Governor. Shortly afterward forty-five members renominated Governor Lewis, and nominated Thomas Storm of New York for Lieutenant-Governor. The Federalists made no nomination. Judge Tompkins was elected by over four thousand votes out of sixty-six thousand and sixty-three cast.
