MILITARY APPRECIATION MONTH

National Military Appreciation Month will be celebrated in May and is a declaration that encourages Americans across the globe to observe the month in a symbol of unity, to honor the current and former members of the U.S. Armed Forces, most importantly those who have died in pursuit of freedom. In May, National Guard Family Programs will honor our Military Spouses/Partners. If you have a spouse/partner that you would like to honor, we will be highlighting these individuals on our social media outlets (Facebook/JSS).

Puppies Behind Bars trains prison inmates to raise service dogs for wounded veterans and explosive detection canines for law enforcement. The puppies live in prison with their puppy-raisers from the age of eight weeks to twenty months. As the puppies mature into well-loved, well-behaved dogs, their raisers learn what it means to contribute to society rather than take from it.

HISTORY OF THE FALLEN BATTLE CROSS

By : Bradley Snyder is a Senior at Attica Central School, his father (William) had served in the National Guard over 23yrs and deployed twice, his Mom (Michelle) served as the FRG Leader. Brad is a 2nd yr student in the GVEP Medal Trades and Welding program. Brad designed and fabricated this sculpture as a memorial to ALL fallen members of the United States Military. This sculpture was added to the Armory Memorial Garden and will be on display permanently at the Connecticut Street Armory located in Buffalo, New York.

The origins of the Battlefield Cross or Battle Cross are a little vague, but appear to lie in the American Civil War and they are a bit grisly. Until this period, fallen soldiers were buried where they lay, often by opposing forces, with crude markers being erected and sometimes replaced. However, during the Civil War soldiers began to be sent home for burial or buried in an area designed to be a cemetery near the recent battlefield. After a battle was over, people would move through the battlefield to mark the bodies which needed to be recovered and the most convenient marker would have been a soldier's rifle with its bayonet stuck into the ground with his hat placed on top.

During World War II, as units rapidly advanced, Soldiers and Marines would often bury the bodies of their fallen comrades in shallow graves. Once again placing a rifle with bayonet fixed into the ground and a helmet on top to indicate that here lies the remains of an American fighting man. Later, graves Registration Units would follow through and recover the remains for proper identification and burial. Over time, this image came to be associated with military loss.

During Operation Iraqi Freedom and Operation Enduring Freedom, the battlefield cross began to attract popular attention, with numerous units erecting Battle Crosses to commemorate their comrades. Since they could not attend the funerals of their fellow soldiers, some units made a habit of paying tribute at the Battlefield Cross and photographers following the war captured some of these iconic images, which were widely reprinted in the United States. The Pentagon does not typically permit the publication of images of flag-draped coffins, but now the Battlefield Cross has come to be used as a poignant reminder of the cost of war.

Although the Battlefield Cross itself is not an official military honor, it does play a part in the memorial ceremony as a visible reminder of the fallen soldier. Many unit commanders have recognized the value of the memorial, encouraging members of their units to pay their respects to fallen comrades and sometimes holding ceremonies at the site of a Battle Cross memorial.

The helmet and identification tags signify the fallen soldier, their name never to be forgotten. The inverted rifle with bayonet signals a time for prayer, a break in the action to pay tribute to our friend. The combat boots, worn and dirty, represents the final march of the soldier's last battle. After a set period of time, the memorial is respectfully dismantled, with the components being returned to the unit for appropriate disposition.
